Marine Band to perform here

Established by an Act of Congress in 1798, the Marine Band is America's oldest continuously active professional musical organization.

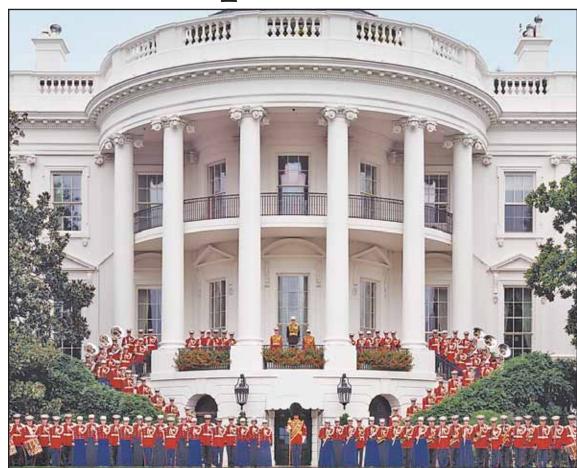

Its mission is unique; to provide music for the president of the United States and the commandant of the Marine Corps. The band was once directed by John Philip Sousa himself.

Whether performing for South Lawn ceremonies, state dinners or receptions, Marine Band musicians appear at the White House more than 300 times each year.

The Colby Free Press and the Western Plains Arts Association will kick off the fall season by sponsoring this event at 3 p.m. Sunday, Sept. 14, at the Colby Community Building. Come enjoy a variety of concert and patriotic music sure to please all ages.

Free tickets are available by sending a self-addressed, stamped envelope to Pat Ziegelmeier, Colby Community College, 1255 S. Range Ave., Colby, Kan., 67701. For information, call (785) 460-5518

Before emergency happens, Prepare Kansas gets you set

The sirens are wailing and the radio and TV stations are warning everyone in your area to seek shelter because you are in the path of a tornado.

Your thoughts are whirling: Where are all your family members? Quick, round up those at home and get them to a safe spot in shelter or basement. What equipment like flashlights and water should you take with you? What important documents do you need to take to the shelter with you and where are they?

Then as you sit in your basement or shelter you wonder how much of the impending damage will be covered by insurance. You meant to tell your insurance agent about grandpa's antique truck that's sitting in the garage. Is it covered?

Sometimes, life in the Heartland is not for the faint of heart. At least that's the way it seems when homes and communities experience tornadoes, flooding, drought and other disasters that often plague Kansas.

Prepare Kansas is a new K-State Research and Extension online challenge designed to help individuals, families and businesses be better prepared ahead of disasters, in order to make recovery easier. Prepare Kansas also coincides with September's designation as National Preparedness Month by the Federal Emergency Management Agency, www.fema.

The effects of a disaster can be eased by preparing in advance. A little work now can make things a lot easier should you be in the situation of recovering from a disaster. The Prepare Kansas challenge is broken down to a few activities to do each week during September, easier than if you are trying to complete them portunity for an initial conversation between from a long list. Some of the activities include developing a household inventory, checking for adequate insurance coverage, putting together a grab and go box and recovery tips for after a disaster.

Why take steps ahead of disaster? Here are just two possible reasons.

• You and your family may not be together when disaster hits. If your family has a plan for getting in contact with each other, everyone will know where to go and what to do in an emergency.

• During an emergency, ATM's and credit cards may not work. Do you keep a small amount of cash on hand?

Before the 2014 Prepare Kansas online financial challenge was developed, the ideas were tested. One of the participants in the test run shares the following about her experience:

What motivated you to participate? "Participating in the challenge provided actual deadlines for me to get things done. The structure of the challenge was helpful. So was the information shared on the blog."

What did you get out of participating in the online challenge rather than doing it on your own? "I don't think it would have gotten done without the challenge. It also created the op-me and my partner about what we would do, where we would meet up, how we would provide for our dog if there were an emergency in our community.

"We now have a written communication plan – we each know where a copy is. This led me to the next step – the actual household inventory. The idea that we could take pictures of the items in our home was really helpful and knowing how simple the process could be was motivating. I used my phone and it was really easy. It is all stored in the cloud so I can access it anywhere."

The challenge can be taken on as a family or at a worksite. Be sure not to put all the work on one person. Working on each activity together gives families or co-workers an opportunity to not only work together on becoming better prepared, but can spark discussions about preparedness in general and the best ways to handle future emergencies.

Join me and others across the state, as I take the Prepare Kansas challenge and take steps ahead of disaster. We all can feel organized and a bit at ease should our homes or businesses encounter disaster.

There is no cost to participate. Challenge activities will be announced weekly on a blog and through email. The challenge starts Monday, Sept. 1, but you have until Thursday, Sept. 4, to get registered and get started. Register for the Prepare Kansas online challenge at bit. "Spices are somewhat of the last frontier in food safety," Williams said. "In fact, the FDA (U.S. Food and Drug Administration) recently published a white paper calling attention to foodborne pathogens and other materials present in spice products."

Twelve percent of spices brought to the United States are contaminated, according to the FDA. Heavy metals are a concern, Williams said, as people can contract metal toxicity from consuming high levels of lead, iron or other industrial-associated metals in spices. If rusty farm equipment is used to process the spices, that rust will likely show up in the final product.

"There's been concern that some spices are being irrigated with industrial wastewater," he said. "If that's the case, the plants will take up these heavy metals, and they will ultimately end up in the spice product."

Mycotoxins are toxic molecules that are left behind by molds and fungi, Williams said. They likely "One aspect of this research contaminate the spice product like aflatoxin, are considered to be carcinogens. Mycotoxins like ochratoxin may in fact be a carcinogen.'

Williams said he continues to catalog toxins present in the spices he's tested and focus mostly on those bulk spices consumers can buy in and around Kansas City.

For those who buy bulk spices to cook with, they have little need to worry. Always cooking these spices to at least 160 degrees will eliminate the bacteria, he said.

"If you use spices a lot at home and you're cooking them, safety can be found at local exit should be fine," Williams said. Williams and his team plan to conduct studies where they will prepare cold summertime dishes, such as deviled eggs and potato salad, sprinkle known contaminated spices onto the dishes and culture the actual foods to see if they can recover the pathogenic strains on the foods. He said they will simulate this much like foods would be prepared, handled and stored by people at home, to make it as real-world as possible.

Immigration fix must be rational

The deadlock in Congress over immigration reform is depressing, especially because the only way to "seal the borders" and solve the problem is to build a rational process that lets workers needed here into the country legally.

When that happens, and only then, will we be able to stop the flow of illegal immigrants across the Rio Grande. Send troops? What are they supposed to do, shoot a bunch of women and children?

As long as it's virtually impossible to get a work permit or a visa to come here from many, perhaps most, countries, people will come illegally. Labor is like any other commodity, whether its drugs or Italian shoes: if people want or need it, and can't get it, someone will smuggle it in. You can double or triple law enforcement, but it doesn't work.

If you still believe enforcement is the answer, you probably think we're winning the war on drugs, too.

Demands by Republican right wingers to "seal the border" first ring hollow. That's just a way to put off any real decisions. And those will have to include some reasonable way to deal with people who are already here.

We don't have the time, money or troops it'd take to find and send them all home. It's not just the ones who come across the border with Mexico, either. Many illegals came here on student or tourist visas from overseas, and just stayed.

Our economy might grind to a halt if we did send all the workers home. They're here because there are jobs, and we have jobs because good workers are scarce.

Any reform plan has to start from the premise that anyone who comes to work will get a permit, and anyone who's here to work should be able to stay – as long as they get a permit.

No one who's here from another country illegally should be eligible for welfare or any kind of public assistance. Services such as health care should be for those who pay taxes and have a permit.

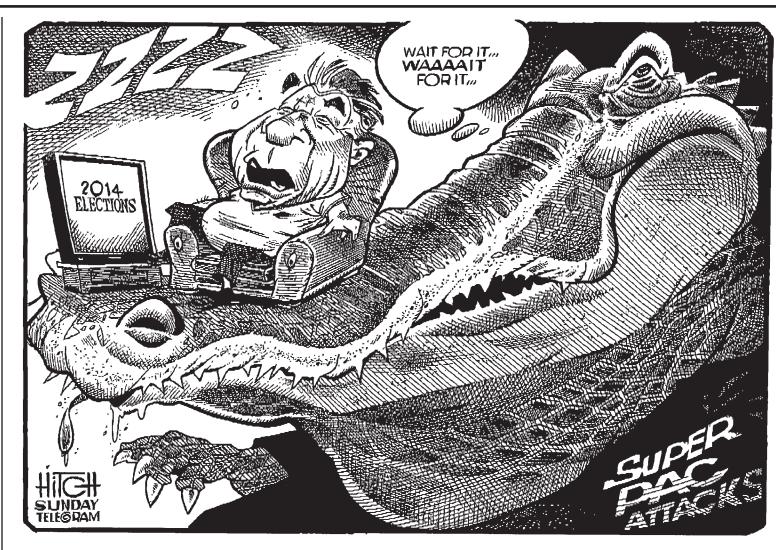

Everyone should pay taxes, and in return, workers could qualify for Social Security and other earned benefits. Citizenship should depend on having a clean record and an established work ethic.

Criminals, those who don't register and any new illegals should be sent home pronto, but we can't do that unless we have a way for people to come both legally and easily. That's the key. A convoluted process that takes years won't change anything.

Attitude here should change, too. We have too many people parading around in "Speak English" T-shirts whose grandparents spoke German in school or prayed in Polish. There are no true "native Americans," just grandchildren of different waves of immigration.

Have we forgotten the words of Emma Lazarus, engraved on the base of our great monument:

"Keep, ancient lands, your storied pomp!" cries she with silent lips. "Give me your tired, your poor, your huddled masses yearning to breathe free, the wretched refuse of your teeming shore.

'Year of heron' still scary to fish owners

It was a tough summer, the year the blue heron came to town.

Hot, dry winds blew over the fields and farm ponds shrank, and there weren't many places to find the frogs and small fish that herons liked to eat.

With its normal food supply hiding in the bottom of dried-up mud puddles, the bird looked for other sources of supper.

Now, your average bird feeder isn't going to make the grade. It's too small and it's too full of seeds. Herons like meat - preferably something that swims.

But, glory be! There was a wonderful source of food right there in town. Koi ponds: all those lovely water features the residents had so lovingly built and stocked with giant goldfish looked like manna from heaven for a big, hungry bird.

Once he discovered this, the heron stripped every back-yard pond of its fish and that summer became known as "the year the bird came!'

This all happened several years ago, but the fish owners still carry the scars.

"I'll never name my fish after friends or family again," one declared as we were discussing the day the heron cleaned out her pond. "I lost my best friend and a brother-in-law. He ate Alice and George."

Her husband had come home in time to watch the last fish slide down the bird's throat.

The only ones left, she said, were tiny fish at the bottom of the pond. They had been so small, she hadn't named them yet.

Another friend chimed in that the bird had come one day and gotten the flashier fish and then returned the next to get the duller ones, the ones that had hid beside the concrete sides. Both women had restocked, and the birds did not return the next year.

One, however, confessed to poisoning her fish the next year when she accidentally allowed chlorinated water into the pond.

Her husband was the champion of the hour. This time, he was able to save six of the fish while his wife changed the water.

"I gave them artificial respiration," he said. The vision of a tall man giving an admittedly large gold fish mouth-to-mouth was mind boggling. However, he quickly explained:

"I didn't give them mouth-to-mouth."

He said he held the fish in the water and moved them back and forth, forcing fresh water through their gills.

"My hero," his wife said.

And one of the fish, she said, still comes to the surface every time he comes by.

Wow, who knew. Maybe there's a small statue of him in the pond. Erected by a grateful school

What is wrong with no-knock warrants?

The Dec. 19, 2013, death of a SWAT team member, using the ever more popular practice among law enforcement of no-knock warrants, brings to the front the need for a reassessment of this warrant.

Revolutionary War with their general search warrants. The Fourth Amendment to the Bill of Rights prohibited such from ever being reinstituted. It reads: "The right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects, against unreasonable searches and seizures, shall not be violated, and no warrants shall issue, but upon probable cause, supported by oath or affirmation, and particularly describing the place to be searched, and the persons or things to be seized." The home is the most sacred of all places, the place where we sleep for approximately eight hours a day and are the most vulnerable. Where children often reside. It is difficult to believe that no-knock warrants cause the people to be more secure in their persons or houses. And although a judge, and not the police or military, decides what is reasonable, it is hard to imagine this kind of entry as ever being reasonable unless the suspect is in the act of committing a life or death crime. The dead on both sides make that case. So what if the drugs are flushed down the toilet by those not law abiding because the police knocked first? When weighed against the police losing their reputation as being first a friend and protector of the people, it pales in comparison. In a free society one should not have cause to fear the police or military.

Such enables the police to enter ones home fast, presumably to confiscate illegal substances before they are destroyed. With upwards of 60,000 of these happening each year from only 3,000 in 1981, perhaps it is time we squared this practice with the Constitution, especially in light of its serious escalation.

Hank McGee, who shot and killed a SWAT team officer because he thought those breaking through his front door were robbing thugs, was acquitted by the Burleson County Texas grand jury. He acted in self-defense.

Although he was lucky and not killed in the exchange of gunfire, this is not the case with others having the same thing happen to them. In 2006, 80-year-old Kathryn Johnson, with similar fears, unloaded several rounds wounding three officers before they killed her. She too was not running a drug house as had been alleged.

Nor was Tracy Ingle of Little Rock, Ark., two years later, when he tried to defend himself with an unloaded gun from what he thought to be entering thugs. Later after four bullets had been discharged into his body and several others into the wall, the gunfire ended. Surrounding police referred to him as Michael. "My name's not Mike," he answered before passing out from his wounds. They had the wrong house and man ("SWAT Team Member Killed Using No-Knock Warrant," The New American, March 3, 2014).

wrong man and wrong address, unlike Ingle who lived, was killed in a no-knock raid. Jose Guerena, presuming home invasion, was shot 22 times. The safety on his gun was still on when found dead. He hadn't fired a shot.

Certainly these are not normal cases, but when intruders break in your door a reasonable person would not first assume that they are friendly. He would grab his gun. This is why initial murder charges against Hank Mc-Gee were dropped.

With the recent passage of the National Defense Authorization Act authorizing the military to kidnap and remove to Guantanamo Bay, without trial and for indefinite detention, anyone the president, or his military, suspect as being terrorists (not defined), the government should expect citizens to fire back. When uncertainty exists with respect to who the good guys and bad guys are coming through his door - often in the middle of the night unannounced and uninvited - how could it not be self-defense?

It is hard to believe that the framers of the Constitution had in mind either the police or the military busting through our doors unannounced with guns blazing, as was the case in the examples just cited. Plant closures affecting the livestock industry son beef plant ceased a majority of its beef processing operations. February 2013, Plainview, Texas - Cargill stopped processing beef at one of its facilities. April 2014, Brawley, Calif. – a beef packing plant operated by the National Beef Packing Co. closed its doors. In just the past two weeks, closing announcements of another Cargill packing plant in Milwaukee, Wis., and L&H Packing Co. in San Antonio, Texas, have come to light.

These few examples of closures in the last six years reflect a trend in the United States that has gone on for more than a decade, according to Glynn Tonsor, livestock economist for K-State Research and Extension.

"For more than 12 years we've been shrinking the U.S. beef herd, so we need fewer processing plants and feedlots than we used to," Tonsor said. "Economists call this excess capacity in the industry. Plant by plant there may be individual reasons for the closings, but the national-level story of why we are having closures is we simply have more hooks and need."

the closures, which has affected different major packing compaissue.

"The availability of cattle, the proximity to the border to be able or meat supply chain per se, but to import cattle from Mexico or Canada and the proximity to large dairies if it's a cow-processing facility all come into play," he said. "But, at the end of the day each plant has to have a local supply relative to its capacity. Some plants are in a better position with that than others."

Tonsor said the United States' beef processing industry is slowly moving north and east. He recognizes the Milwaukee plant closure doesn't fit that trend, but in may have more yet (to close)," general, the processing move is he said. "We're probably going consistent with the cattle supply to shrink the herd even more. To moving north and drying up in the industry's southwest corner - an area that has experienced severe drought the past few years.

Economic impacts

local plant workers who have lost Tight cattle supply has driven jobs. The local impact of a closure, from an economic perspective, is a reduced tax base for the nies in different areas. Tonsor said area and property value pressures, location of the plants is part of the as examples, that adversely affect the local economy.

"That doesn't fit the livestock I don't want to understate the impact (of closures) on the local economy," he said.

From a national perspective, Tonsor said he believes the excess capacity issue will take time before it's resolved, and it will get worse before it gets better. Perhaps the announcements aren't surprising, but it's hard to say which plant is going to close next and when.

"We're probably not done; we grow the herd, we have to shrink supplies by holding females out of the supply chain to expand the breeding herd."

The uncertainty of which pack-Many are affected by the clo- ing plant or feedlot might close equilibrium, with the right number of packing plants and feedlots, the uncertainty will lessen.

'There's notable value in (reduced uncertainty), because feedyard or cow-calf operators who retain ownership might be little less worried about local market access," he said.

Tonsor said he doesn't believe the excess capacity issue and individual plant closures will affect consumers, because competition in the packing industry remains vibrant. There isn't just one plant, and several companies are still running multiple plants.

How herd rebuilding comes into play

Currently, the process of herd heifer back until we get a calf that > showing up in the feedyards," he said. "That tells me they're staying on a ranch somewhere, but to be fair, there are mixed signals."

The most recent U.S. Department of Agriculture cattle inventory report shows herd expansion is not happening, Tonsor said. So it remains unknown if cow-calf producers have started the process

How can you be a reporters' favorite source?

By Ginny Grimsley

Getting a call from a reporter who wants to quote you as an expert for his story, review your book or product, or invite you to write an exclusive article for a publication, is a major coup. It means that your marketing efforts are paying off. Who would blow such an opportunity?

Unfortunately, a lot of people. Those who don't understand journalists' deadlines and needs are liable to be quickly passed over in favor of sources who do. That lack of knowledge can also rack up lots of wasted time and money for those who take a shotgun approach to blasting their message or products to any and all journalists. If you don't consider their individual needs, you're likely making a futile effort.

After a decade of working with journalists, arranging for interviews with and exclusive articles

Dear Readers: Recently, a reader shared her hint about storing cooking fat in a glass jar, in the freezer, before garbage day. Here are just a couple of readers' hints on the subject.

• Lori J., via email, said: "Simply keep the fat in a container in the fridge, rather than the freezer. On a cat-litter-changing day, pour the fat into the soiled litter, which will absorb it. Put it in the trash as usual." Heloise here: I do hope it is put into a plastic bag!

• Clifford W. in Louisiana wrote: "I have found that used laundry-detergent bottles also can be used to pour that excess fat or used grease into. I store it under the sink until it is full, and then I put it out in the trash. The odor of the detergent residue in the bottle also cuts down on the smell." Heloise here: Please be sure that the grease is cool - it might melt the plastic jug! - Heloise

SEND A GREAT HINT TO: Heloise P.O. Box 795000

San Antonio, TX 78279-5000 Fax: 210-HELOISE

Email: Heloise@)Heloise.com

TESTING DONENESS Dear Heloise: When baking a cake or muffins, the instructions often say to test for doneness with a toothpick or knife. If it comes out clean, the product is cooked. For me, a toothpick often is too short, and a knife can mess up the appearance.

Then I found something that works perfectly! I bought a package of 100 wooden barbecue skewers that are 10 inches long and very inexpensive. They work great! I won't use anything else. -Louise G., Neptune, N.J.

FREEZING ONIONS

Dear Heloise: May I add to your hint about freezing chopped onions and garlic for later use? (Heloise here: A reader asked if chopped onions and garlic could be frozen.)

It's important to spread the chopped items out in a single layer on a cookie sheet, freeze them like that, then package the frozen bits in a plastic bag. That way, you can scoop out the amount you need and keep the rest frozen. If you pack them before freezing, they'll end up in a big clump! -Lisa in Tennessee

A very good hint, Lisa! Cookie sheets also are a great way to freeze all types of berries. Glad you wrote! - Heloise

NO MESS

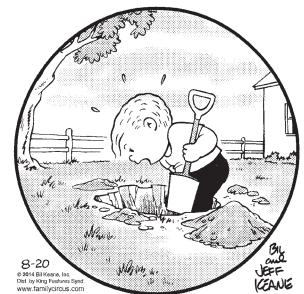

Dear Heloise: To save money and eat healthy, XI usually pack a lunch for work. I mainly make salads, but I kept having a problem with the salad dressing. I didn't want the dressing already on the salad.

I took an empty, glass spice jar and cleaned it. The lid screws on tight, so I can place salad dressing in it and not worry about it leaking. -Kim J., Kansas City, Mo.

A two-for-one hint - save money and eat well! Love it! – Heloise

Eliminating the Guesswork

There is often considerable guesswork during the play, and if you are by nature a good guesser, you will do well in the long run.

All the same, a good cardplayer tries to avoid subjecting himself to a guess if he can. He might guess as well as the next fellow when he has to, but his chief stock-in-trade is a talent for dodging guesses and solving his problems by other -- and more reliable -- means.

Assume you're West, defending against five hearts. You could lead a spade, of course, because partner raised spades, but your best chance of defeating the contract lies in leading a diamond. Your hope is that partner has an ace, in which case you're apt to beat the contract when you get in with the ace of trumps, put partner on lead with his ace and get a diamond ruff for a one-trick set.

Declarer wins the diamond with the ace and leads a low heart to the queen at trick two. It would be easy to go wrong at this point. If you take the ace and lead a spade to partner's presumed ace, you wind up behind the eight ball. Declarer wins, draws trumps and concedes a club to the ace to make the contract.

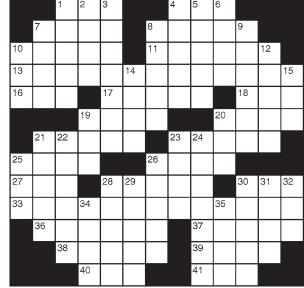

You could plead that East was more likely to have the spade ace than the club ace, but that would not be a good excuse for failing to guess which one he actually had.

Instead of consigning the guess to pure chance, it is far better to duck the first trump lead and take the second. This gives your partner a chance to signal with a high spade or a high club, depending on his hand, and in that way all guesswork is eliminated.

Road trip! Trojans take on No. 1 in Texas

By R.B. Headley

Colby Free Press rbheadley@nwkansas.com

Bring on the Apaches, Buccaneers, extra-spicy burritos, 10-gallon cowboy hats and quite an opening weekend for Colby Community College's volleyball team.

First big tests of the school year can't get much more fun than this. The Trojans will be traveling to Tyler, Texas — about 90 minutes southwest of Dallas – where two National Junior College Association top five teams await them: No. 1 defending national champion Blinn College Buccaneers (39-3 last season) and No. 5 national returning runner-up Tyler College

Nature knows when it's time to rumble

R.B. HEADLEY/Colby Free Press Some ominous rain clouds loomed in the distance (right), but they stayed away long enough for Colby High School and Heartland Christian to finish their opening pre-season football practices this week. Players (below clockwise) conquered warm temperatures while throwing roll-out passes, pushing sleds, lifting tires, making catches or attacking each other in contact drills.
