

Letters support, oppose power plant permit

"I am very concerned about the burning of municipal wastes at the proposed coal plant site," Ramona Kashka wrote. "If other trash is shipped in, unknown sources could be involved. The state needs to make sure there will be no toxic waste dumps to clean up, along with poor air, once this facility is started."

"We depend on the state to protect us. From a social standpoint, most of the people around here feel they have not political power and are put down if they speak up."

"I strongly encourage Municipal Solid Wastes be removed from the permit due to health risks and the future of organic farming in the area."

"I feel as strongly as Gov. Sebelius," wrote Leonard Kashka, "when it comes to preserving our health and upholding our obligation as stewards of what we hold as essential to life. Clean air to breathe, quality water to drink and the enjoyment of our surroundings are all essential."

"The air permit applied for would increase the amount of permitted pollutants over the old permit. Municipal solid waste would increase toxic materials, such as lead, cadmium, mercury, trace organics, dioxins and furans. The U.S. Environmental Protection Agency recommends that municipal solid waste first be source reduced, recycling and composting second and disposal in landfills and waste combustors last."

Kyle Willems of Goodland asked the state to "stop this travesty."

"Why can't we promote clean energy like wind or solar? After all, Kansas is know for being a windy state," Willems wrote. "Plus wind generators would bring tourism to our towns. Because everyone would want to see the big wind generators."

Lezlee Willems of Sacramento, Calif., who grew up in Goodland, wrote:

"The air and soil and water of the Earth calls on you to stop the burning of trash. Your young ones will praise your name because you are strong enough to do what is right and I am sending the entire company of Heaven to stand by you in protection and support to guide you in manifesting peace on Earth, and in purifying you."

One handwritten letter did not have an address, and the signature was hard to read.

"Please help the folks at Goodland, Kan., realize the gifts of clean air, clean water and soils rich in nutrition," the letter signed by Heidi S. said. "Looking down from Google-Earth, the rich cropland needs no pollution from burning and dumping."

At a public hearing in February, Morris summarized his testimony as the staff person who reviewed the permit application.

He listed federal and state requirements for this type of power plant and said the modifications would not change any of the previously approved emission standards.

The types of fuel would be expanded to include burning tire chips at a rate of up to nine tons per hour, he said, plus agriculture byproducts, wood and wood waste and trash, known as municipal solid waste.

He said the permit requires performance testing, monitoring and reporting of all the specific emissions to the state and federal regulatory offices.

"The emission are not expected to cause any impact on the air," Morris said.
