If you can possibly stand this terrible heat, try to get out and see the fair exhibits.

there are our friends in southern Kansas, Oklahoma, Missouri and Texas who are enduring day after day of debilitating, triple digit temperatures and hardly a cloud in the sky anywhere.

Talk about unusual gardening seasons is a bit trite of course but this has been an unusual gardening season, trite or not. And you can see the unusualness of the season with a visit to just about any county fair around, where the normal fine quality of the produce isn't quite up to par.

garden produce, as well as to garden producers. In many cases, it becomes a matter of doing our garden chores in the very early hours of the morning, or not at all.

household, and while I'm grateful for even an unusually small crop of cucumbers, I'm also happy for a bumper crop of dill. Dill is one of those herbs that has so very many uses in most gardening households. Not only is it a must for pickles, but in the early spring, it's fern-like young leaves make wonderful seasoning agents for spinach salads, for soups, or for almost any other cooked vegetable.

in my garden. Those plants that are not used each summer always drop their seeds to the ground in the fall and new plants emerge the following spring when the soil is tilled for the new season.

Beware of emails asking for personal information

Many Kansans have reported receiving suspicious emails that appear to be from the Internal Revenue Service to the Kansas Attorney General's office. The email tells taxpayers their federal tax returns were rejected and asks the citizen to complete an attached form.

These are just some of the latest email scams attempting to steal personal information from consumers. Email scams and have been around almost as long as email itself. Scammers often pretend to be a government agency to trick consumers into handing over information. The emails may even look official - the fake IRS emails, for example, have the agency logo and appear to come from an official government email address.

A healthy dose of skepticism is always appropriate when you receive a suspicious email. Often, these emails contain misspelled words or poor grammar, which can be a good sign it's not legitimate. In this case, the IRS has warned consumers that it never sends unsolicited emails asking for personal information. When there is a problem with citizens' tax returns, they are notified by a letter in the U.S. mail. You can verify the legitimacy of a letter from the IRS by calling the agency toll-free at (800) 829-1040.

fastest growing crimes. Sadly, these thieves can be very difficult to catch. In the attorney general's office, we are working to beef up our consumer protection work, including our efforts to combat identity theft. We hope this focus will result in more scammers being caught and will help keep Kansans from becoming victims of identity theft.

in preventing identity theft is not us - it's you. Thanks for taking time to be on the alert.

Don't do it. These emails are not from the IRS. The form is usually a virus.

But they are fake. It's important to remember it can be easy for a scammer to set up a fake email account.
