the phone and offered him the job, which he accepted. The commissioners have also appointed Dr. Travis Daise to be medical director.

Goodland Regional Medical Center has been operating the ambulance service. The commissioners decided to take it over effective January first, and have been looking for a director to start now and to get things going for the transition. Strnad said now that Wright has been hired, she wants to bring him and the hospital administration in for a meeting to make sure things go smoothly.

The commissioners have said they plan to implement several full-time positions in the ambulance department in addition to the traditional volunteer emergency medical technicians.

$14 million and the second plan, $12 million.

Dustin Avey, a bond advisor for Piper Jaffrey, was brought in to talk about how the financing for the improvements would be handled.

Avey said the interest rates are currently lower than they were in 2010. Historically the state aid paid 15 to 20 percent for building projects. The aid will continue for the 2013 to 2014 school year. Also construction cost are currently low.

He said traditional financing would be through mill levy for a school bond that is passed in an election by the vote of the people.

An option has arisen with the projected decrease in the state sales tax. The board could not access funds through a sales tax directly but if the City of Goodland would support it they could do a sales tax for educational programs and facilities.

He said the city would have to agree to it and it would have to be approved by the voters.

A temporary sales tax increase of one percent by the state is to end in July and if the city would want to it could put its own sales tax in to take the place of the state one. Basically leaving the sales tax rate the same or less.

The board said they would like to hear more about the possibility of a sales tax.

Superintendent Bill Bierman said he would explore the issue with the City Manager Doug Gerber.
