

First snow

Goodland saw its first snowfall of the season on Friday. The snow didn't stick for long, however, melting by the end of the day. More snow fell Saturday, but also did not stick.

Gerber said, the city can pass an ordinance and begin negotiations, after which 18 months have to pass before the new service can be established.

- Approved a donation policy. Any group seeking a donation will now have to file an application at city hall. The commissioners set a limit of $2,500.

- Heard from Economic Development Director Michael Solomon, who said the city is in the process of becoming an Entrepreneurial Community, which is a support network for small business including an advice center and small business loans and tax credits. Goodland has been selected as a finalist in the application process.

College holds Technology in Education Conference schools are at the substitution phase, where they use technology as a replacement for older things like books or overhead projectors. Where they should strive to go, he said, is first to augment their teaching using technology, and eventually redesign the curriculum around it to do things they couldn't do before.

The top reasons most schools are still in the substitution phase are lack of money, lack of training and fear. Education is changing, Senstock said, and teachers are no longer the content experts. Information can be readily looked up, and teachers have to become attuned to that, rather than providing ready-made knowledge.

"But we've been teaching with ready-made knowledge and using the same tools for 60 years," he said. "Students learn in a completely different way now."

Students are taking ownership of their own learning, he said.

"Never has there been a time when we more have to question our brick and mortar institutions," he said.

The challenge then becomes how to get students to want to come to a campus, he said. The iPad program at Northwest Tech has accomplished this, and the college was even named one of the top five desirable schools based on technology. This innovation has allowed the college to more than double its enrollment in four years, he said.

Senstock concluded with another video, this one about a class of elementary school students who used iPads to make a video. He challenged the audience to keep wondering what students and teachers will get to do in the future.
