Search is on for new hospital chief

By Kevin Bottrell

kbottrell@nwkansas.com

Goodland Regional Medical Center is proceeding with its search for a new chief executive officer.

Trip Kinmon, managing principal of Kinmon Healthcare Group, has been serving as the interim chief executive officer for the hospital and practice administrator at the Family Health Center during the search. Kinmon is a Texas native who grew up in Louisiana. Kinmon began his career working with big city hospitals, until about 10 years ago when he discovered rural healthcare.

He said the hospital is looking for someone with a commitment to and experience in rural health care; someone who can bring ideas to the table with confidence and with the energy to make them happen.

Kinmon said the employment specifications — which include the kind of experience, credentials and other information the hospital is looking for in applicants — have been put together. After those specifications are reviewed by the hospital board and the administrative team, they will be put out through search networks. This should happen within the next several weeks, he said, and the hospital is hoping to have someone in place by the end of the year.

In the meantime, Kinmon will be staying on as interim administrator until the search is complete.

Besides looking for a new administrator, Kinmon said the hospital is trying to make many other changes. One such change is to enhance its relationship with the specialists who come to town on a regular basis.

Kinmon said the hospital is looking at what equipment can be obtained and what facilities can be built in order to ensure that any medical service that can be provided in Goodland, is provided in Goodland. He said the hospital has a good group of specialists, primarily from Denver, who enjoy coming to here.

"We have a couple of great general and orthopedic surgeons that have been here for years," he said. "Surgery, orthopedics and GI could be expanded, if we had the equipment and facilities.

"They are much appreciated for what they do for us. We want to be as deep on the bench as we can possibly get, and if we need to add things that we have to look carefully at that. If the demand is there, we can justify the expense."

Kinmon said the hospital will have to do its due diligence in analyzing demand and figuring out what medical services people are leaving town to obtain. Really complex cases are always sent to a more suitable facility. Kinmon said the hospital will have to educate

Kansas moving to new standards

By Pat Schiefen

pjschiefen@nwkansas.com

The state of Kansas is moving to a "beefed up" version of the Common Core Standards called the College Career Readiness Standards, curriculum director Michelle Williams told the Goodland School Board at their meeting last week.

The new standards are made up of about 85 percent of the Common Core Standards, she said, but the state has added about 15 percent that they want taught.

Common Core Standards have already been implemented by the Goodland School District, Williams said. They were developed by educators to replace the No Child Left Behind requirements of the federal government with focuses on language arts and mathematical skills.

Williams said the old standards used a lot of rote, or memorization, learning but the new standards pushes kids to use the information. The schools have narrowed what they teach because of standardized tests.

The new standards, she said, have fewer standards which will allow

Patrol is stepping up alcohol enforcement

The Kansas Highway Patrol is joining other local law enforcement agencies from across Kansas to work extra hours during the "You Drink. You Drive. You Lose." Special Traffic Enforcement Program.

The campaign runs from now until Sept. 2, which includes the Labor Day Weekend. The additional enforcement efforts are underwritten by a grant from the Kansas Department of Transportation. During the campaign, there will be additional enforcement of all Kansas traffic laws, with particular focus on impaired driving laws.

If you are involved in a crash in which alcohol is a contributing factor, according to Kansas Department of Transportation, you are 2 1/2 times more likely to be injured and 4 1/2 times more likely to be seriously injured or killed, than if you were in a crash in which alcohol was not a factor. The ratio of death to injury in alcohol-related crashes

Two Goodland hospital consultants named to Denver top doc list

A Denver magazine recently named two of Goodland's visiting consultants on "Denver's Top Doctor" list for 2013.

5280: The Denver Magazine featured more than 300 doctors in 95 specialty fields in its annual Top Doctors list this year. Two doctors who regularly see patients at Goodland Regional Medical Center as part of its Consultant Specialty Clinic, Dr. Vijay D. Subbarao and Dr. Edward "Ted" Parks, were included on the 2013 list.

Dr. Subbarao was included on the list among top doctors in cardiovascular disease. He practices at Rose Medical Center and St. Anthony's in Denver and has been a consulting doctor in Goodland since 2004.

This is the sixth time he has been included on the magazine's list.

Dr. Parks, who has been on the list now 12 times, is an orthopedic surgeon at Presbyterian/St. Luke's and St. Joseph's in Denver. He has been a consulting specialist in Goodland since 1995.

For the past 20 years, 5280 Magazine has surveyed doctors in Denver and asked them, specialty by specialty, which metro-area physicians they would trust to treat them or their families. Any Denver-area doctor with a valid Colorado medical license can fill out a ballot for the list.

The Goodland hospital and clinic regularly brings in 50 medical professionals who provide consulting services in 25 different medical specialties.

To schedule an appointment with one of the specialists, contact (785) 890-6030. For a complete list of visiting consultants, visit goodland-regional.com.

Couple marry in Salt Lake City

Angela Dawn Detmer and Gernemy Allen Cloyd were married at 5 p.m. on July 27, 2013, at Millcreek Inn in Salt Lake City, Utah. The Rev. Anita Gordon officiated at the double ring ceremony.

The couple's parents are Bill and Joan Detmer of Lincoln and Greg and Tammy Cloyd of Goodland.

The bride was escorted by her father down the aisle. She wore an ivory taffeta gown accented with rhinestone beading on the train and skirt and her veil was attached to a rhinestone tiara. She carried a bouquet of blue roses with ivory dendrobium orchids.

Stacy Cloyd, sister of the bride, served as the matron of honor. Her bridesmaids were Beranda Oetting and Tasha Carter. They wore blue strapless dresses and carried bouquets with white roses and blue and purple accented dendrobiums. The flower girl was Grace Cloyd, a niece of the bride and groom. She wore an ivory, sleeveless dress.

The groom wore a black tuxedo with a blue vest and his boutonniere was a white rose with a blue and purple dendrobium accents. Shane Larson served as the best man and the groomsmen were Matt McDonald and Bill Hayden. They wore black tuxedos and vests similar to the groom's.

The ushers were Garrett and Grady Cloyd, brothers of the groom, and they wore black tuxedos and vest similar to the groom's.

The program and guest book attendant was Gami Robken, sister of the groom.

Following the ceremony, a reception and dance were held at Millcreek Inn.

The bride graduated from Lincoln Junior Senior High School and Kansas State University at Salina. She is a PathNet Solution Architect at Cerner Corporation of Kansas City, Mo.

The groom is a graduate of Goodland High School and served in the Marine Corps for 12 years. He owns and manages Willie's Lounge in Salt Lake City, Utah.

The couple will live in Salt Lake City.

Inmates get training, grow big garden

On about one and one-half acres of fertile Kansas soil, neatly-kept rows of tomatoes, cucumbers, peppers, potatoes and other produce greet visitors to the Hutchinson Correctional Facility.

Welcome to the Garden for Good, where 30 inmates – trained as Kansas Master Gardeners – find respite from the harsh realities of life behind bars.

For the past three years, this has been their labor of love. But the Garden for Good is as its name suggests: a symbol of the inmates' fierce determination to make good with themselves and the local community.

"When I'm in the garden," says inmate Keith Mathis, "I guess you could say it's a retreat, away from the animosity, away from the negativity that's inside the (prison) dorms. It's not all negativity, but there's a lot of it, because you know, you're in prison."

"But you get out here and you put something in the ground, watch it, water it and the next thing you know it's growing. You're eating it, you're taking the seeds and the next year you're planting seeds that you've harvested. It gives you a sense of pride."

What are they?

The Extension Master Gardener program is typically offered through land-grant universities in the United States and Canada. In Kansas, it is supported through Kansas State University and many of the local extension offices in the state.

The program provides 40 to 50 hours of horticulture training to individuals who then volunteer a similar amount of time in their communities each year. Some of the activities include giving lectures, creating community gardens, teaching classes, conducting research and more.

In 2012, Kansas State University reported that Kansas Master Gardeners provided 94,136 volunteer hours, or the equivalent of 45 full time extension positions and an estimated value of $1.7 million.

To learn more about Kansas Master Gardeners, contact Ward Upham at (785) 532-1438 or wupham@ksu.edu. For more information online at www.hfrr.ksu.edu/mastergardeners.

for Good three years ago. Three inmate groups submitted a proposal in which they promised to raise their own money and do all the work.

The prison's administration approved the proposal, provided the land and helped to set up classes with Kansas State Research and Extension's Master Gardeners program.

"All of us who have gone through the course are certified Kansas Master Gardeners," said Victor Mitchell, one of the garden's original members. Each year, 10 to 12 inmates are accepted to take the classes, which are taught inside the prison walls by volunteer Extension Master Gardeners.

Mathis likened the Master Gardener classes to a college course. He said the inmates learn how to identify good and bad garden insects; create alternatives to garden chemicals; make compost; take soil samples; and even how to use flowers that attract pests and keep them away from the produce.

"A lot of guys here have never had a garden in their life," Mitchell said. "They're probably city kids, but they're going to have something they can do with their kids and their families when they get out of here."

Barr notes that some inmates may even get a break when it comes time for a parole hearing. The Master Gardener classes are part of the prison's program to reward inmates for good behavior.

"Idle time in prison is never a good thing," he said. "This gives them an opportunity to keep themselves focused and plan toward the future."

"In a prison setting, you don't get a lot of opportunity to show that you can be productive, other than a classroom setting. So when you come out here and look at this garden, it speaks for itself. All the hard work and dedication these guys spend each day in this garden to keep it up, it's a huge task."

Inmates typically work eight to 10 hours in prison detail or, in some cases, a private industry job. Only after that do they get time to work in the garden.

The first year, before they had some operating funds, the garden work included hand watering every vegetable plant, often lugging five-gallon buckets of water as much as a quarter mile.

"I'm not going to lie," Mathis remembers, "there were times when I'm thinking to myself, 'What are you doing?' You burn up, you're hot, you're sweaty ... but you start seeing the produce or you taste a tomato or taste an onion. You see Ms. Murdock from the soup kitchen and you see the smile on her face when you take her a 55-gallon trash can of tomatoes and they are happy."

"It makes you feel good about yourself."

Robbins credits the 30 inmates who currently work in the garden.

"I think the big thing is that everybody comes out and works their tails off and, every man is really sincere about our donations and what we do for the outside," he said.

"A couple of them have told me that this was the greatest single thing they've accomplished in their life. I say it's my second, because I have a son, and he's first. But this garden, other than that, might be the single greatest thing I've accomplished. And I'm proud of this more than anything else."

Adds Mathis: "When I was out on the street, I didn't do this. It gives me a tool that when I get out, to grow a garden, to help the community, to help the soup kitchen. It's about me getting better for myself, and getting better for the (community)."

Webinar to focus on ethanol use in old engines

Old tractors are often prized possessions, whether it's an antique tractor used in shows and parades or that tractor still occasionally putting in an honest day's work in the field.

Tractors and other old vehicles with "legacy" engines in them were designed to run on the fuels of their time, but what about running modern fuels, like ethanol, in these older machines?

A webinar, titled "Ethanol Use in Legacy Engines," will take place at 9 a.m. (Mountain Time) Friday, Aug. 30, to discuss just that. Edwin Brokesh, an instructor of biological and agricultural engineering at Kansas State University, will present the webinar, which will cover the interaction of ethanol with different materials found in older engines and how the combustion process may affect the operation of older engines. Participants should come away with a better understanding of the care and maintenance of an older engine using ethanol-containing fuels.

Brokesh says much of his work with Kansas State Research and Extension involves providing people with a basic understanding of biofuels – what they are, how they work in engines, and their differences and similarities. While writing an extension publication about small non-road engines and ethanol, he had the idea to present this webinar as a learning tool.

"I started to think about all these old tractors that you see at farm shows, parades and fairs, and the countless others that Dad or Grandpa bought new and are still being used," Brokesh said. "These machines also may see fuels containing ethanol. Because it is fair season, the thought was to produce a webinar now and then to write a publication off of the material presented in it later."

To participate in this free webinar, start connecting five minutes prior to the start time at connect.extension.iastate.edu/agency/. You need a computer with Internet access and speakers. Participants can login by clicking "Enter as a Guest" and entering their name and business or institution, and clicking "Enter Room." The webinar should last about an hour. To confirm the ability to connect, go to www.extension.iastate.edu/testconnect/.

Questions can be directed to Brokesh at (785) 532-2907 or ebrokesh@ksu.edu. To see other farm energy videos or webinars, go to farmenergymedia.extension.org/videos.

Kansas Medicaid program collecting information

The State of Kansas Medicaid program, KanCare, is collecting household information from beneficiaries to meet new federal eligibility guidelines mandated by the Affordable Care Act. The Kansas Department of Health and Environment has mailed the instructions and a data collection form to about 130,000 KanCare households of beneficiaries who are parents with children and pregnant women. This mailing is not being sent to elderly and disabled KanCare beneficiaries.

The federal eligibility rules beginning Oct. 1 change the type of information the states need when determining Medicaid coverage for their residents. Currently, Kansas does not require KanCare applicants and members to report whether and how many people in a household are filing income taxes. This data collection form asks the family to list how each person in a household is related to one another and indicate which members of that household plan to file income taxes in 2014.

For current KanCare households, this information is needed in the system so that the automated eligibility determination can work when the members are up for review.

"We are asking all current KanCare members who are parents with children or pregnant women to actively check their mailbox for this form and then complete the form and send it to us in the return envelope that we've provided. This information should be returned by Sept. 15, and it will help us in our work to assist our members with their coverage," said Susan Mosier, director of Medicaid services at the department. "For those requiring assistance, phone numbers are provided in both English and Spanish. If members call the KanCare Clearinghouse and provide this information over the phone, the form does not need to be returned."

For KanCare members who need assistance with the information mailed to them, the number to call is: (855) 751-4012 for English, or (866) 305-5147 for Spanish. Enclosed is a copy of the household information mailing, which includes the tax relationship form and cover letter.

K-State crop information is now available online

Kansas State Research and Extension has posted two new agriculture-related publications online that are available free to the public.

The "2013 Kansas Performance Tests with Winter Wheat Varieties" publication provides the results of annual comparisons of new and currently-grown winter wheat varieties in major crop-producing areas of the state. The tests generate information designed to help Kansas growers select wheat varieties suited for their area and conditions. Jane Lingenfelter, Kansas State assistant agronomist and performance test coordinator, is the author.

Another publication, "Wheat Variety Disease and Insect Rating 2013," provides information on wheat genetic resistance to diseases and insect pests, which is typically the most effective, economical and environmentally sound method of control. The ratings represent the results of multiple field and greenhouse evaluations by public and private wheat researchers. The ratings can help producers select wheat varieties to plant and minimize the potential for yield losses. The publication was written by Erick De Wolf and William Bockus, both professors in Kansas State University's plant pathology department, and Jeff Whitworth, associate professor in Kansas State's entomology department.

Women invited to agriculture meeting

Women involved in agriculture can enjoy two days of rejuvenation and education at the fourth annual Women in Denim conference Tuesday and Wednesday, Oct. 1 and 2, at the Mount Sunflower Bed and Breakfast in Sharon Springs.

The event, put on by the Northwest Kansas Conservation and Environmental Alliance, features an evening of activities prior to a full day of sessions. The alliance includes conservation district managers from Cheyenne, Decatur, Gove, Logan, Rawlins, Sheridan, Sherman, Thomas and Wallace counties.

This year's keynote speaker will be Judge Tommy B. Webb of Sublette, a South Korean war orphan who will speak on the importance of learning to navigate life's twists and turns while making a positive difference.

Stacey Seibel, a Hays lawyer, will speak on estate planning techniques to pass assets from generation to generation. Karen Ridder, a freelance writer from Topeka, will speak on the answers she received from Kansans 95 years and older when she asked them about where they worked, why and what they continued to do throughout the years.

Another session will address breast cancer, exploring people who live with the disease, those who survived it and their families.

Sponsors are the alliance, the Kansas Association of Conservation Districts, the Western Prairie Resource Conservation and Development Council, Kansas State Research and Extension and participating conservation districts.

To sign up, contact Bev Elder at the Wallace County Conservation District, (785) 852-4262, extension 3, or the Thomas County Conservation District, 462-7482.

Competition good for our products

The Framers of the Constitution mandated free trade among all the states in the union. The free economic system for the United States was clearly spelled out in Article I, Section 9 of the Constitution.

"No tax or duty shall be laid on articles exported from any state. No preference shall be given by any regulation of commerce or revenue to the ports of one State over those of another: nor shall vessels bound to, or from, one State, be obliged to enter, clear, or pay duties in another" (www.usconstitution.net/xconst_A1Sec9.html).

The original concept of free trade is healthy for our country and global economy. However, trade agreements such as the North American Free Trade Agreement and World Trade Organization have simply cost Americans hundreds of thousands of jobs, moved plants to Mexico and lowered wages for American workers. How has this helped America?

It's good economy for us to sell to China, India and the rest of the world. It's good for Americans to have the choice to buy from other countries. This is good competition. It's not good competition if China does not play by the rules. If China is using slave labor and manipulating their currency so they can sell merchandise cheaper, that is not fair. If they are putting unfair taxes on our products so that they are not competitively priced in China, that must stop.

It's not good when American corporations ship our jobs to Mexico, China and the far corners of the world. Corporations who ship our jobs overseas should continue to pay the current corporate tax if more than 30 percent of their work force is out of the country. On the other hand if corporations will keep at least 70 percent of the jobs in the United States then let's reward them with a 15 percent tax rate.

Toyota, Honda and Nissan have made the American auto industry stay on their toes. I believe we have great American cars today. We would not have the kind of American cars that we have today without the competition of foreign automakers. As Americans we deserve the right to choose which car we want to drive. Competition gives us better choices.

We make our products in America better. Our corporations must be given a chance to thrive. If our corporations are going to thrive we should further do the following:

- We should lower corporate tax rates.
- We must encourage right to work policies.
- We must have the opportunity to ship our products to China, India and around the world.

We can compete with the world. We have hard workers and the most creative minds on the planet. Our labor force can compete with anybody.

Other nations impose large fees on our products to restrict their citizens from buying our products and that is unfair. We should not do business with countries that limit our ability to sell in their countries by imposing ridiculous fees and taxes. It's also unfair of us to impose tariffs and fees on foreign products to make it difficult for Americans to buy.

Most Americans would prefer to buy American products. At every opportunity we should buy American made products. Examine the product carefully as it seems to be harder all the time to find items made in the USA. Most all Americans are trying to make their money stretch further. Products that are lower in price are going to have our attention when we shop. When we buy we each have to be responsible for our own money management and try to determine what is good, better and best for our hard earned dollars. —Glenn Mollette, author of American Issues

A valuable trip to Turkey

Our trip to Turkey was organized and paid for by the Niagara Foundation, an American affiliate of something called the Hizmet (service) Movement, or more popularly, the Gülen Movement after its founder and leading thinker, Fethullah Gülen.

We would learn much more about this religious and civic movement, with its worldwide reach, as we traveled in Turkey. No one preached to us, and often we had to ask about the connection, as the television station, newspaper or university we visited turned out to be aligned with the movement.

Mr. Gülen himself reportedly does not take credit for the movement or approve of the use of his name for it, but that may be the one thought his followers disregard. Both he and the movement align with the Sunni Muslim tradition, to which an estimated 87 to 90 of the world's Muslims belong. They emphasize the Sufi tradition of mysticism, which has many followers in areas of Persian influence, from Turkey and Iran through Afghanistan and the former Soviet republics, and in Indonesia and the Philippines.

Mr. Gülen helped to found something called the Journalists and Writers Foundation, which might be the keystone of the movement. Eventually we found ourselves in the unimposing offices of the foundation in Istanbul, where we watched a couple of videos and learned a little more about "the Movement."

The founder himself left Turkey to seek medical treatment in the U.S. and has not returned. In 2000, he was indicted in Turkey on charges of undermining the secular state

• along the sappa

established by Kemal Atatürk after the defeat of the Ottoman Empire in World War I. Today he lives in Pennsylvania, where he continues to write and lecture.

The foundation notes that one thing that fuels the movement, and the many programs and dialogs it sponsors, is the body of his work, including more than 70 books which continue to sell. While the loose-knit organization includes everything from schools (more than 500 around the world) and universities to media outlets (Zaman is the largest daily newspaper in Turkey), magazine and book publishing, foundations and other businesses, and a major disaster-relief organization, there is no structure to bind them together, only common beliefs.

And those, by the standards of today's world, are fairly benign. Mr. Gülen adheres to an ancient tradition of tolerance and peace that may predate Islam itself and which has influence far beyond the Muslim world. It's best-known proponent is perhaps Mevlana (master) Mohammed Rumi, a 13th century Sufi theologian, philosopher and poet whose works are familiar in the West. (Time magazine reported that Rumi remains today the best-selling poet in the U.S.)

We visited Rumi's mausoleum in Konya,

a beautifully tiled structure which sits at the center of the Mevlana Museum, and Mevlana University on the outskirts of town, where Gülen followers are building a college in the tradition of both the 13th century saint and today's "modern Rumi," as some followers like to call Mr. Gülen.

(The college is housed for now in a former shopping center donated by a developer aligned with the Movement. The permanent campus is a building as the university ramps up to a full compliment of about 8,000 students.)

The message of all these people is one of peace, love, tolerance and freedom. The Movement is built on earlier Sunni and Sufi though, on the teachings of Mevlana Rumi, on the ample works of Mr. Gülen, who has met with world and religious leaders ranging from Greek Orthodox Patriarch Bartholomeos I to Pope John Paul II to Eliyahu Bakshi Doron, former Sephardi chief rabbi of Israel.

The guiding principle through all this is dialog, talk among and between nations, religions and groups of all kinds. It's a central thought driving the movement, including Niagara.

Fascinating. And by the way, our delegation of 16, mostly editors and journalists from Nebraska, did not enjoy a free trip to Turkey. We bought our own tickets and made a "donation" of $500 each to the foundation's Omaha branch, which sponsors several such trips each year, along with programs in Nebraska. That didn't begin to cover in-country expenses, however.

Compared to what we saw and learned in eight days, the cost to us was nothing.

Equality for students, not just institutions

Equalization of public education funding is sound policy — no child's education should be dependent upon the property values of a given district.

The Kansas Legislature accordingly distributes about $340 million in supplemental general state aid to districts with low per-pupil assessed property valuations. School districts support the concept of equal funding, but they are adamantly opposed to giving low income students equal access to educational opportunities that may exist away from a traditional public school.

Significant achievement gaps exist for Kansas' low income students. For example, low income fourth graders are 12 points behind the state average in reading on the National Assessment of Educational Progress. That's more than a year's worth of learning. The national assessment doesn't publish results for students who are not low income, but the gap between them and economically disadvantaged students is even greater.

Large gaps also exist on the state assessment. Only 47 percent of low income students can read grade-appropriate material with full comprehension, whereas the state average is 62 percent. Again, the real achievement gap for low income students is even greater.

These gaps are absolutely avoidable. It's not that these students can't learn; it's that they haven't had equal access to learning opportunities. But the Kansas education lobby worked very hard to defeat public charter school and tax credit scholarship legislation this year, putting institutional interests first.

Some parents can afford to move to a different neighborhood or pay private tuition if their assigned district isn't the right fit. Many others cannot. Public charter schools give parents options and are being implemented and expanded in many states. Dr. Margaret Raymond, director of the Center for Research on Education Outcomes at Stanford University recently said, "... (public) charter schools are benefiting low-income, disadvantaged, and

• dave trabert

The Kansas solution — "just spend more" — is not working. Inflation-adjusted per-pupil spending increased 33 percent between 1998 and 2011 but Kansas' reading scores for low income students barely changed over that period. Fourth grade scores improved by just three percent and eighth grade scores improved by less than one percent, both of which were less than half the national average.

Meanwhile, low income students in Florida recorded significant gains. Fourth and eighth grade scores improved by 14 percent and five percent, respectively. Florida's low income students are now slightly ahead of Kansas in fourth grade and only two points behind in eighth grade; in 1998, Florida students were more than a year behind their Kansas counterparts.

What did Florida do differently? They implemented a full array of student-focused reforms, including public charter schools and tax credit scholarships for low income students — they did it while spending about $800 per pupil less than Kansas.

Public charter schools aren't about funneling money to private interests and they aren't harmful to students in traditional public schools. Those are simply scare tactics to preserve the status quo.

It's true that some public charter schools have substandard results and close. It's also true that some traditional public schools have substandard results, but they stay open and lock those with the fewest options into a failing school.

Every student should have equal access to a high quality education. Parents should be able to choose the school that best suit their child and that choice should not be limited by their income.

The search is on for new hospital administrator

people that it provides this care. Kinmon said the hospital has been meeting with the other health-care providers in Goodland such as Good Samaritan, Wheat Ridge Acres, Golden West, Northwest Kansas Emergency Medical Services and the Sherman County Health Department to try and develop good relationships and see what the needs and resources of the community are. One example of the hospital partnering with other community organizations is working with the school district to provide baseline balance checks for student athletes. Kinmon said this provides something to compare responses to when an athlete has sustained a head injury, helping doctors determine whether or not there has been a concussion. The Family Health Center has added a new position, a patient services advocate, to act as a facilitator, advocate and representative in every aspect of patient interaction to make sure they have a good experience when they receive care at the clinic. Kinmon said this includes making sure patients have an easy time with scheduling procedures, getting paperwork done and more. People expect doctors to know what they are doing, he said, so getting good medical care is not surprising or special. However, he said, if all the other aspects of a hospital visit go smoothly, that can affect whether they view the overall experience as positive or negative. "This is new to us, and possibly unique among small, critical access hospitals," he said. If the position is successful, he said, it would be expanded to include the rest of the hospital.

Another planned addition to the staff are two new family practice doctors: Dr. Kali Ruben Thaler and Dr. Heather Licke. Ruben Thaler will be starting in December, but has already spent time working in the Goodland emergency room. Tina Goodwin, director of marketing and volunteer services, said Ruben Thaler has had contact with the hospital for nearly two years, and will be working one weekend a month until she starts full time in December. She and Dr. Licke, who will be starting work next year, went through medical school and residency together. "They are both very interested in rural medicine and women's medicine," Goodwin said. Both doctors specialize in family medicine and obstetrics.

teachers to teach concepts more in depth. The College Career Readiness Standards uses the model of study, analyze and problem solving. Currently the state is planning on using assessments by ACT. ACT is known for its tests that high school students take prior to going to college, said Williams. The organization also does other educational testing. Board member Mike Hamilton asked if the grade and high school assessments test for the same things that the college placement test does. Williams said that currently they do not. To help teachers adapt to the new standards Williams said she plans to work with teachers on a day by day basis. She wants to make the adoption more of a process instead of an in-service training. Superintendent Bill Biermann said the district is adopting a different method of teacher evaluation. The non tenured teachers are evaluated twice a year for three years. A tenured teacher is evaluated once in three years. This evaluation tool will also be used for the principals and superintendents, Biermann said. The tool measures four key elements. They are learning, knowledge base, student instruction and professional learning, leadership. Biermann said that administrators will be in the classroom more and the process will increase communications between teachers and principals.

is almost four times higher than the death to injury ratio for non-alcohol related crashes. "The last thing we want to investigate on our highways is a fatality crash involving someone's family member. We hope that everyone will remember to designate a sober driver, not just this weekend, but all of the time," said Colonel Ernest E. Garcia, superintendent of the Kansas Highway Patrol. "Troopers and other officers will be out in force over the next few weeks, and we hope this contributes to a safer time for all of those utilizing our Kansas roads." Over the 2012 Labor Day holiday reporting period, Kansas troopers worked four fatal crashes, resulting in four deaths. One of the fatal crashes was alcohol-related.

Contitpors in the old pro showmanship at the Tri State Royal in 2012. The Tri State Royal allows the grand champions and the reserve grand champions of different area county fairs to compete against each other.

Winners in the Tri State Royal

Fair champions from the area county fairs competed in the Tri State Royal on Saturday, Aug. 10, at the livestock area at the Sherman County Fairgrounds in Goodland. The show has been held since 1962. The event is held right after the Northwest Kansas District Free Fair in Goodland ends.

Northwest Tech soccer team win first outing of the season

The Northwest Kansas Technical College men's soccer team won its first game of the year 5-4 on Saturday against Chivas Denver. The Mavericks scored the first goal 28 minutes into the first period. Chivas tied the game 1-1 with a goal less than two minutes later. Northwest Tech pulled ahead 2-1 21 minutes into the second half, but Chivas tied things up again four minutes later. With the score at 2-2 at the end of regulation play, the game went to overtime, where each team is allowed a series of penalty kicks. The Mavericks scored three goals to Chivas' two, giving Northwest Tech the 5-4 win. Chivas Denver is a semi-pro team that Maverick's coach Angel Campos plays for. During Saturday's game, Campos played on the opposing team. Next action for the Mavericks is Saturday at home against Northeastern Junior College.

Like puzzles? Then you'll love sudoku. This mind-bending puzzle will have you hooked from the moment you square off, so sharpen your pencil and put your sudoku savvy to the test!

Here's How It Works:

Sudoku puzzles are formatted as a 9x9 grid, broken down into nine 3x3 boxes. To solve a sudoku, the numbers 1 through 9 must fill each row, column and box. You can figure out the order in which the numbers will appear by using the numeric clues already provided in the boxes. The more numbers you name, the easier it gets to solve the puzzle!
