The Kansas Department of Health and Environment is telling local offices that it has enough money to back checks for the Special Supplemental Nutrition Program for Women Infants and Children for October, but to withhold checks for November and December.

In a release issued Wednesday, the department said the program, known as WIC, provides nutrition education, breastfeeding support and supplemental nutrition for lowincome families. Statewide there are about 70,000 people a month.

Although the program is administered by the state through county health departments, it is federally funded, and thus affected by the government shutdown. The state health department said that because it cannot predict how long the

Free-style quilter's work shown at Blackbird Gallery

By Pat Schiefen

pjschiefen@nwkansas.com Self taught needle artist Lois Horton has been embroidering quilt blocks and putting them together since her third child was born. She is now a great-grandmother of soon-tobe five.

She said she has lived all of her life on ranches and needed something to do. Horton said she was not into soap operas. Horton said she was a cowboy's wife for 45 years.

Horton said her grandma taught her embroidery and she has taken it from there. If she uses a pattern she uses her own colors and changes the stitches to suit her. If she is using three strands for an animal she said she likes to mix different shades so their hair looks more like animal hair.

"I can not do a duplicate," she said. "I like to do it free style.'

designs herself. She said she has a son who was a bull rider and he wanted bull riding on his quilt. You can't buy any patterns like that, she said, so I drew them myself.

For some of her patterns she has drawn the Lois Horton stands behind one of her quilts at the Blackbird Gallery Photo by Pat Schiefen/The Goodland Star-News made baby quilts for the people she knew When she first started she said she first who were having babies. Then people started of Sherman County. She said Peter Thierlot asking her to make them quilts. The biggest ones she has made are king sized.

She said most of her quilts are hand quilted but that she has tied a few. Her finished quilts have an aura of age to them.

"I do not like X's," said Horton of cross stitch patterns. Although a quilt with butterflies and one with green tractors is cross stitch embroidery at the Black Bird Gallery.

"I have five going right now," Horton said. She has made 15 quilts in the last year and has been making from 12 to 15 a year since she was 23.

When she was asked what brand of floss she used she said she buys most of her floss by the color. If a color attracts her she buys it.

She said she does dish towels for a lady in Big Bend, Texas, and when the lady sends her towels she sends floss. She also does pillow cases and other things.

"You never have too much embroidery thread," said Horton.

Horton is relatively new to the area and moved with her son to work at the Buffalo Creek Buffalo Ranch in the north and east part and his family own the ranch. Thierlot is from Reno, Nev., and is a partner with Ken Klemm in the Buffalo Guys.

Besides her two sons she also has three daughters. Her children live mainly in Texas and Colorado. She also has 12 grandchildren.

"Most of my children have stayed in agriculture and a passel in rodeoing," she said.

Horton said she love living out on the ranch. "Ranching is not a job it is a way of life," Horton said. "Nothing about it is easy."

She said when you live as much as 60 miles from town you learn how to buy food for a month, doctor and take care of yourself.

Horton said she was born in the Fort Worth, Texas, and spent most of her life around the Big Bend area or western part of Texas.

Her quilts are on display and for sale at the Blackbird Gallery, 921 Main.

The owner of the gallery Shirley Houston said she decided to show the quilts at her gallery because they were "more artistic and broke away from traditional embroidery."

Horton said of her quilts, "I like to see the finished product and do it my own way."

Newspapers still a leading news source

Where was it that you heard about the so-called demise of the newspaper?

Probably, you read about it in your daily newspaper; because, as Mark Twain, a journalist himself, was able to write to a friend: "The report of my death was an exaggeration." And a good newspaper will go on to explain the source of the rumor, and if false, will present the facts that debunk it.

Well into the 21st century, American newspapers are as relevant as ever, because like other vital segments of their community, they are always at work and always looking to reinvent themselves. We've seen this in high-profile deals such as Jeff Bezos' acquisition of The Washington Post; but we've also seen dramatic changes nationally at newspapers large and small, as their news, advertising, marketing and circulation staffs have embraced a variety of digital and social media platforms to reach new and existing readers, while continuing to present the news in the traditional print format.

But the modes of communication are not the most important change: That is in the way that the newspaper has greatly expanded its role as watchdog for the community.

Trust in our public institutions is on a steady decline, and sturdy journalism is going to be the only reliable way for average Americans to glean the truth from a stream of conflicting information disseminated by political partisans and vested interests.

In the past year, newspapers were the leading source of information on these stories of vital importance in their communities and nationwide:

• The Denver Post conveyed news via text, social media and video of the gunman who killed 12 moviegoers in Aurora, Colo., while the tragic events still were occurring.

• The Tennessean in Nashville called attention to Tennessee's Department of Children's Services' inability to account for the deaths or near-deaths over a three-year period of approximately 200 children who were in custody or whose welfare was being monitored by the state. The reports led to the department head's resignation and a restructure of the department.

• An investigation by The Sun Sentinel of Fort Lauderdale, Fla., uncovered widespread cases of off-duty police officers' reckless driving.

In each case, the newspaper looked to its role as a voice for the entire community it serves.

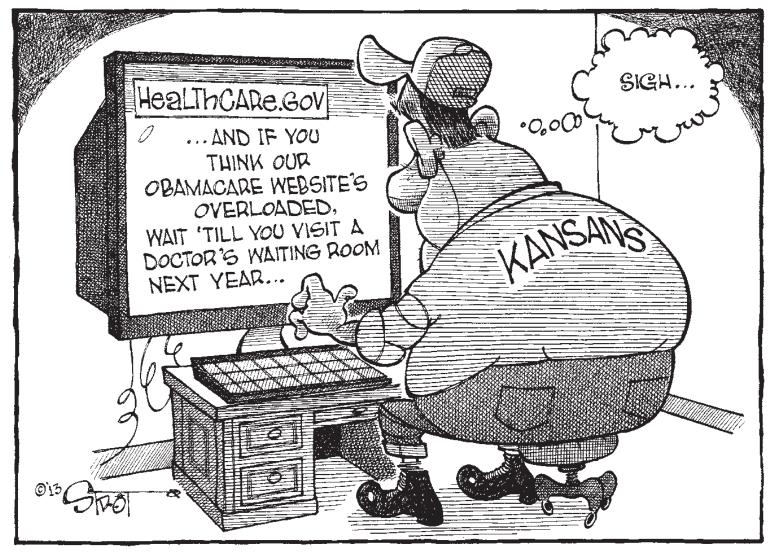

Despite all the obituaries being written about newspapers, we look at these examples and many more and find that newspapers are amazingly spry and alert - and always at work.

- Ted R. Rayburn, The Tennessean

Handle turtles with care

To the Editor:

As I hold a bachelor's degree in life sciences from Kansas State University (it would have been in microbiology, but I choose not to torture myself with calculus), I feel I am educated enough to speak on this subject. Salmonella bacteria, along with a vast spectrum of other bacteria, are everywhere, all the time. Most animals are carriers, even human animals, as it is part of the normal bacteria "flora" of the intestines. This means that all carrying animals also have it in their feces, when they eliminate. That includes humans. So anyone "freaking" out about salmonella, too late, you are already infected. So no, turtles are not little spawns of the devil crawling around spewing salmonella as they go.

The legality of the sale of the turtles is being investigated and handled by the state and federal authorities.

It does not appear to be illegal to own one of the turtles purchased at Flatlanders. That said, I would never recommend someone purchase wildlife or pets of any kind off the street, from someone who has no proof of the animal being bred or raised in a proper environment. Please do not "win" them at carnivals either. It is very illegal to take most species of wildlife out of the wild and into your home, this would include "saving" wild animals.

So the bottom line is, if you do not live in the To the Editor: dorms where there are rules against all pets, and you choose to keep your turtle, please nerable populations - nursing home patients handle and care for it responsibly. As with -is a key focus for those of us in the Kansas oral

Wash your hands after handling or caring for pets with soap and water and clean surfaces that were contacted in during their care. health community. Recent national media attention has ignited a focused discussion on the needs of the elderly and the unique challenges in helping them maintain good oral health.

Research shows that proper dental care can prevent serious, even life- threatening infections. It's also linked to proper nutrition, as poor dental health can result in an inability to eat, compromising one's overall health.

In Kansas, the oral health community is working proactively to meet the dental needs of our elderly fellow Kansans. In addition to Kansas dentists and hygienists offering their services in nursing homes throughout the state, we are engaged in a comprehensive review of strategies and pilot projects to improve access to care.

Weather talk

For the first time last week a touch of fall filled the early morning air. With the coming of fall and approach of winter, it's fun to recall some time-tested weather sayings.

Many of the following weather signs were collected from farmers and ranchers across the state. It seems there is very little people would rather talk about than the weather.

So let's talk weather.

During the winter season, strong northerly winds indicate snow and sometimes a blizzard within 24 hours. Southerly winds are a sign of dry, warmer weather.

difficult for them to fly. When you see hawks circling high in the sky, this is a fair weather sign.

When frogs begin to croak, look out for rain. Hens and other barnyard fowl pick at themselves-oiling their feathers-just before a rain.

Lots of dead skunks on the road mean plenty of moisture is on the way. Another good sign of approaching wet weather is the aggravation of corns, bunions or arthritis pains.

These signs are surprisingly accurate because they are based on generations of farmers. ranchers and other people who have observed cyclical changes in the weather.

There is plenty to be said for the folk wisdom of our ancestors. They watched and charted weather patterns for generations rather than just a few hours or days. It's fun to hear their conclusions handed down from one generation to the next, and anyway, what would we have

Too much travel, not enough time

I love to travel, but I'm getting a little tired of seeing the world through a windshield.

Trips are just plain more fun when you have a chance to anticipate them before going somewhere and then savor them after returning home.

This year, I've just gone and gone and gone, and not had a lot of time to anticipate or savor.

I think the whole thing started with our trip to Turkey - a wonderful experience, but one that I would have preferred to have been able to prepare for better and taken time afterwards to remember at leisure.

But I was in the hospital. Then our son had that little lawnmower accident in Lawrence. Then I was back in the hospital to repair my original problem, and the trip was here before I was half ready for it.

I loved every minute of my time in Turkey, but it was a running trip. We were on a bus, train or plane for what seemed like 50 percent of the time we were in that lovely country. The other 50 percent was spent learning and sight seeing. Sleep and leisure time were just not on the itinerary.

Then we flew back to Omaha, drove home and turned around and left for Flagstaff, Ariz., the next day. We didn't even take time to wash our clothes. We tossed what was left of our clean underwear and a few T-shirts into our suitcases and took off again.

In Flagstaff, we attended a railroad history convention and took an excursion to the Grand Canyon. I'm hoping to go back to that scenic wonder sometime when I can enjoy it more and not think of it as an incredibly large, colorful hole in the ground.

I need time to absorb things, and they were coming all too fast.

I barely had time to download my pictures from my camera to the computer and it was time to head for Colorado.

Then we were on to Phoenix for the National Newspaper Association convention and a baseball game between the Arizona Diamondbacks and the Colorado Rockies.

Back home for a week, then it was back to Colorado, but not Denver. We go to southern Colorado and it takes from nine to 12 hours to get there, depending on how many stops we make.

I was home eight hours – most of them in bed - then it was off to work for 10 hours and off to Dodge City for a Kansas Press meeting. When that was done, we drove to Abilene for Chisholm Trail Days, then back home the next day.

Whoo! Can someone stop this train?

Nope, it's time to head for Arkansas with my sister to visit our last uncle and aunt, both in their 80s.

Maybe next month or next year, I'll slow down.But then,I suppose,I'd start to complain that I never get to do anything or go anywhere.

In other business, the commissioners: • Heard from Gerber, who said the city had been given a check for $2,000 to help pay for a new scoreboard at the softball fields. Gerber said the city has some money budgeted for improvements at the ballfield complex, and a new scoreboard is one project that came up.

"We're reaching out to some of the organizations who said they'd be interested," he said.

The new scoreboard will replace the one on the northeast softball field.

• Authorized city staff to negotiate an agreement with Mike Miller to crush the concrete scraps sitting in a pile on his property south of U.S. 24. Miller said the crushed concrete would be moved off as it gets sold.

Gerber said there had been other options such as requiring Miller to move the concrete or having city workers remove it. None of the options were ideal solutions, he said.

• Discussed re-applying for the Neighborhood Revitalization Act. The act allows people to get a tax rebate on 90 percent of an improvement project, be it a new building or an update to an existing one.

Economic Development Diretor Michael Solomon said the act was started in the 1990s, but Sherman County first applied in 2006. The act is currently administered by the county, and to get the full rebate, the person doing the project must apply to each taxing entity.

Printed on each program check is a date labeled: "Do not use before this date." The checks are valid for 30 days from that date. All checks with a "Do not use before this date" in October or September may be redeemed by participants and grocery stores will be reimbursed for purchases made with those checks.

"Limiting the issuance of WIC checks is the appropriate response at this time," said Dave Thomason, director of the program at the Kansas Bureau of Family Health. "We are hopeful that the shutdown will be resolved before it impacts WIC past the month of October, but we must be fiscally responsible during this time of uncertainty. ## Small towns have trouble keeping groceries

It's odd to think about a lack of fresh, nutritious foods in the midst of thousands of acres of wheat, soybeans, and other food crops, but rural communities across the country are having a hard time keeping their grocery stores open.

Kansas State University agricultural economist Hikaru Peterson is taking a closer look at the problem that's as pervasive in Kansas as it is in other states. What she's found are significant challenges for rural grocery stores, and depending on the size of the community, the challenges can differ. She also found that some have taken innovative steps to keep stores viable, even in the smallest of communities.

Peterson's latest work as part of the Rural Grocery Initiative (www. ruralgrocery.org) was to take an in-depth look at five grocery stores in the rural Kansas communities of Cuba, Sedan, Smith Center and Minneola, and in Hebron, Neb. The study, initiated in 2012, was funded by a U.S. Department of Agriculture-Agriculture and Food Research Initiative grant.

Despite challenges common to many rural stores, she found that like the communities themselves, each of the five grocery stores surveyed had a unique story.

• Cuba Cash Store in Cuba (Republic County), which has a populaheritage meats and catering, and its owners own a restaurant in town,

• Central Market in Hebron, population 1,600 (Thayer County seat) also has developed working relationships with local farmers.

'Grocers in the smallest rural communities with less than 1,000 people face different managerial challenges than those in small communities with populations of 1,000

Stores in the larger communities (1,000 to 2,500) were not so concerned with the minimum purchasing requirements imposed by wholesalers and believed that working with local institutions such as schools, churches and other organizations to combine orders contributed to good will in the community. They also have found ways to work with local farmers.

Conversely, stores in communities with populations of less than 1,000 felt they had to constantly monitor minimum purchasing requirements in order to get purchasing discounts. They had to work harder to actively seek out institutional accounts and did not believe they had room to work with local farmers.

The study showed that managers of stores in the 1,000 to 2,500 population category felt that having a café or deli in the store was beneficial, but not critical to absorb "shrinkage" which includes items unsold by the "sell by" date. They wanted to remain specialized in their grocery operations so that they did not take business away from other local businesses, and had a mutually beneficial relationship with local eateries.

Stores in the smaller communities (less than 1,000) viewed having a café or deli as being more important to their operations because they helped reduce shrinkage and brought in additional customers. They also viewed that part of the store as a venue for community

Rural Grocery Facts

Facts about grocery stores in rural U.S. communities include: • The U.S. Department of Agriculture defines a rural "food desert" as a census tract where 20 percent of the population is below the poverty level and 33 percent live more than 10 miles from a supermarket or large grocery store. That amounts to 2.3 million rural citizens who live in a food desert.

• The primary challenges rural grocers face are competition from big box stores, operating costs, labor issues, government regulations, lack of community support, low sales volume, and having to meet minimum buying requirements from suppliers.

• Rural grocery stores are an important economic driver in their communities and a primary source of nutritious foods.

• Grocery stores are part of the social fabric of a community, sometimes providing meeting places.

• Grocery stores hire local people, on average creating 14 jobs (five full time and nine part time).

• Grocery stores generate local sales taxes - on average 20 percent. Locally-owned small businesses such as grocery stores have a large economic multiplier effect.

"Owners and managers of grocery stores in the smaller communities are serving their communities of some communities as well as through 'wearing many hats'," Peterson said, in part to keep their stores in business.

All store owners and managers viewed having a custom meat 1,000 or more – are what can best counter as a trait that significantly differentiated them from big box supermarkets where meats are generally pre-packaged. Stores in rently tabulating the responses of the smaller communities, in particular, featured their meat counter prominently.

Some stores are exploring whether serving shoppers by offering nutrition scores and other educational information at the point of sale could help their customers and their #### business at the same time.

In addition to competition from "big box" stores within 30 miles smaller convenience stores often linked to gas stations, an emerging competitor for rural grocery stores - particularly in communities of

be described as "dollar stores," Peterson said.

She and her colleagues are cura survey sent in June to all postal patrons in a five-county area of Kansas. The survey will shed light on grocery shopping behavior. Preliminary results of the survey will be available this fall.

Regulation on Trichomoniasis in effect

more than 36 public meetings with at least 2,000 stakeholders, the Kansas Department of Agriculture Division of Animal Health's final regulation regarding Trichomoniasis in cattle will be effective Oct. 4.

Trich is a highly contagious venereal disease in cattle that is carried by a bull and transmitted to a cow during breeding. It causes pregnancy loss or abortion in the cow, prolonged calving intervals and high open rates in infected herds, which costs livestock farmers and ranchers valuable income.

The final regulation addresses the change-of-ownership of bulls within Kansas and import requirements for both bulls and females. Trich prior to change of ownership

Only 10 people have achieved a World Slam

By Ron Wilson

Director Huck Boyd National Institute for Rural Development at Kansas State University There are six subspecies of wild turkeys in the world. Four of those are found in the U.S. and two are found only in Mexico. For a turkey hunter, an ultimate goal is to bag one bird from each subspecies. In the turkey hunting world, such a feat is called a World Slam. Perhaps 300 people have achieved a World Slam in turkey hunting, but only 10 of those have done so with a bow – and one of them lives in Kansas.

Then he learned to hunt with a rifle and turkeys. and shotgun.

became a citizen. When he wanted those are found in the U.S.: Eastern, to go deer hunting, he found that rifle hunting licenses were hard to la. A hunter who harvests a turkey come by at the time, so he decided from all four of these subspecies to try bowhunting and found that is referred to as having achieved a he loved it.

In 2000, Carlos bought a place named the Santa Maria Ranch of Santa Maria Ranch, an outfitting 10,000 acres of privately-owned as having achieved a World Slam. service for hunters. Carlos grew up land for his customers to use, plus in Mexico with a love of hunting. he books hunts in Mexico through As a little boy, he and the other kids friends in that country. His customwould hunt rabbits with slingshots. ers primarily hunt whitetail deer

As mentioned, there are six sub-Carlos moved to the U.S. and species of wild turkeys. Four of Rio Grande, Merriam's and Osceo-Grand Slam (like a clear-the-bases, four-run homer in baseball). A hunter who bags a bird from all six south of Junction City and began subspecies, including the Goulds As we learned last week, Carlos operating it as an outfitting service and Ocellated turkeys which are

World Slam hunters are in elite company. Maybe 300 hunters have achieved a World Slam, and of those, only 10 hunters have achieved such a feat with a bow. One of those is Carlos Navarro.

All those years of hunting with a slingshot helped my bowhunting skills, Carlos said. It s the same physics, and it helps judge distances. Carlos continues to bow hunt and to guide other hunters through his outfitting service.

One day Carlos and his family were visiting relatives in Arizona. He took his baby daughter for a walk in the neighborhood and noticed a Navarro is the founder and owner for hunters. He now leases another found only in Mexico, is referred to pickup truck with a bumper sticker which said, Got Antlers? Carlos Kansas? Yes. Carlos estimates that was intrigued so he knocked on the 80 percent of his customers are door. There he met a taxidermist and fellow hunting enthusiast named Jake Pike.

Jake and Carlos developed a friendship. Ultimately, Jake became assistant outfitter for Carlos.

Carlos and his wife Audrey live in Shawnee where Audrey is a real estate broker. The hunts take place in a picturesque rural setting in the middle of Kansas. The ground Carlos owns and leases is located south of Junction City and north of the rural community of Woodbine, population 205 people. Now, that s rural.

Do hunters like hunting in rural repeat customers.

Every (deer hunter) in the U.S., whether they re in California or Maine, wants to hunt deer in Kansas, Carlos said.

Santa Maria Ranch offers guided whitetail deer and predator hunts (primarily for coyotes and bobcats), as well as turkey and shed antler hunts. In Mexico, Carlos has access to 20,000 acres near Durango and 20,000 acres near Campeche.

Carlos has hosted hunters from Pennsylvania to Arizona and has had hunters from as far away as South America, Australia, and Russia.

It's time to plant your spring blooming bulbs

By Kay Melia

The Gardener vkmelia@vahoo.com It must have been at least 20 years ago when someone handed me some kind of nice looking flower bulb, and when I inquired as to what kind of bulb it was, the answer was something like "Just plant it in your perennial garden, and expect a surprise next summer."

I don't have a perennial garden as such. but I dutifully planted the bulb about this time of the year over on the other side of the peonies, less than a foot or so from the iris. I watched with interest next spring and soon saw that I had a very healthy plant with very nice light green foliage. And then, without so much as a peep and without producing so much as a bud, the foliage completely died back, and I forgot about the nice healthy looking bulb that someone had so kindly given to me.

But wait! Late in July or ear-been planted in the spring and given up for dead. The blooms were four or five inches across and were borne on tall stems. The same thing happened for 10 or 12 years until drought and heat finally convinced it to retire. It was always a surprise, thus the name "Surprise Lily" was very soon now.

It is correctly designated as "Lycoris" although some seed catalogs still refer to it as a surprise lily. The species is a real wonder in the world of plant life. The J.W. Jung Seed Company sells them for $5.95 each, or three for $15.95, plus postage.

Indeed, it is bulb planting time in the High Plains. Spring flowering bulbs...tulips, daffodils, hyacinths, and others can now be planted. Personally, I prefer to wait until about the first of November when soil temperatures are cooler to insure that the bulbs stay cool and make no atassigned. I will plant three of them tempt to come out of dormancy. But flavoring agent for next summer's spring blooming bulbs, always buy the largest ones you can find. Larger bulbs planted this fall means larger blooms next spring. Small bulbs planted this fall will result in smaller blooms next spring. As those small bulbs grow larger the following years, blooms will also be bigger.

And while you're involved in this bulb planting thing, go down to the grocery store and buy the largest bulb of garlic you can find. Remove a few bulbs now, and be well paid the cloves individually and plant yourself a row of nature's favorite enjoyment. Garlic must be planted If you have not yet purchased your in the fall, not the spring, to expect a good crop. Actually, it is best to plant garlic that is sold as seed, but it is sometimes hard to find, and rather expensive. Plant the cloves about three inches deep in damp soil just about anytime now, and the green tip of the growing plant will absolutely be the first sighting of green in your garden next spring!

Hey...don't file away the garden tools just yet. Get out there and plant early next year!

Fall is a good time to have your soil testing done

Though we often think of soil testing as a spring chore, fall can actually be a better time. Soiltesting laboratories are often verv busy during the spring resulting in a longer turnaround from submission to recommendations. Also, soils in the spring are often waterlogged, which makes taking samples difficult. If your soil test suggests more organic matter, fall is a much better season because materials are more available than in the spring, and fresher materials can be used without harming young tender spring-planted plants.

Begin by taking a representative a sample from several locations in the garden or lawn. Each sample should contain soil from the surface to about 6 to 8 inches deep. This
