Tornadoes seen in Sherman County

By Kevin Bottrell

kbottrell@nwkansan.com

Two days of intense weather over the weekend brought rain, hail and several tornadoes to the Sherman County area.

At 2:18 p.m., a tornado was spotted in Cheyenne County, Colo., about 8 miles southwest of the town of Kit Carson.

As the storms moved east, they dropped hail up to 1.75 inches in diameter as well as rain. Another tornado was spotted five miles west of Weskan. The skinny funnel was on the ground for about a minute. Several tornado chasers were in the Wallace County area.

About 4:45 p.m., a tornado was reported in Sherman County southeast of Edson and another south of Brewster. Dave Floyd, warning coordination meteorologist with the National Weather Service, said as of Monday morning the service is still trying to pinpoint where these tornadoes occurred. Numerous spotters and law enforcement reported the two tornadoes, which were in close proximity, but the only damage reported was to a cornfield about two miles southeast of Edson. Floyd said the tornadoes were likely to be classified as EF-0, the weakest on the Enhanced Fujita Scale.

The storm also produced straight line wind gusts up to 63 mph. In Hitchcock County, Neb., a section of roof was ripped off a metal building at the Trenton airport. An old farm windmill was bent as well.

About 2 a.m. Sunday morning, a line of storms formed near Sherman County and headed southeast. The storms produced heavy rain and hail up to 3 inches in diameter. Some hail damage, such as broken windows, was reported in Sherman County.

Floyd said the heaviest rain fell in Logan and Gove Counties. The Smoky Hill river and other nearby creeks were in flood stage and out of their banks. A number of highways, including U.S. 83 and U.S. 40, were closed in places where up to two feet of water was running over the road. Flood warnings were still in effect Monday morning.

While .48 inches of rain was recorded in Goodland, elsewhere in the county up to 1.22 inches were reported. Further south, rainfall was reported as three inches or more.

At 5 a.m., the storm produced a tornado southwest of the city of Gove. Floyd said several outbuildings at a farmstead were damaged, but no one was hurt. Muddy roads have so far prevented the Weather Service from surveying the damage.

Floyd said the area is in for milder weather this week as far as rain-storms go. A cold front is moving through early in the week, and the area is expected to be hotter and drier for the Fourth of July weekend, with scattered thunderstorms still a possibility.

This small tornado was photographed from Brewster on Friday. The tornado, along with another one to the west, was spotted about 4:45 p.m.

Draft of water vision to be made available

The first draft of the Kansas Water Vision will be posted to the Kansas Water Office website today so citizens are able to provide input to the Governor's Water Vision Team on the statewide tour that will be held Monday through Friday, July 7 to 11.

"The Team began gathering input in December from stakeholders of all water uses to develop this first draft," said Susan Metzger, vision team leader in the Kansas Water Office.

"There were some resounding messages throughout the last few months: a strong, long-term water vision for Kansas must be statewide while recognizing that one size does not fit all; a reliable water supply is bigger than quantity and the quality of our water resources is equally important; and public information and education is critical to the successful adoption of the vision."

As seen the past few years with extremes of extended drought to cases of flooding, the entire state and its citizens are affected by what happens with water supplies and its management. Last fall Gov. Sam Brownback called for a 50-Year Vision to ensure a reliable water supply for Kansas citizens.

"We are looking forward to hearing from Kansans," said Secretary Jackie McClaskey. "The entire state is affected by what happens with our water, no matter what area of Kansas you live in. Water determines everything from community and industry survival and growth to making us marketable for other opportunities."

Stakeholders and Kansas citizens are encouraged to attend a vision tour session. For information go to www.kwo.org.

New artwork unveiled at Chambers Park on Saturday

By Pat Schiefen

pjschiefen@nwkansan.com

Art enthusiasts and their families had a busy Saturday at Chambers Park.

The program started at 8 a.m. with the opening Saturday of the Good Land Farmers Market. The farmers market is open every Saturday morning through October. Other vendors were Clark Crossing Company with coffee and drinks, Made by Jade Breads and Old Westport Spice and Trade with breakfast burritos.

Next the Goodland Ambassadors had the ribbon cutting for the newest painting on an easel in a park. The painting showed a couple from an earlier period of time enjoying the park with the fountain and the Handy House in the background. The artist, Cally Kirby Krallman of Topeka, grew up in Goodland and graduated in 1977 from Goodland High School. Krallman likes to paint on site, or "en plein air."

Gloria Elliott and Kris Yost had a wreath making workshop. The project was a wreath honoring the 4th of July with red, white and blue.

During the day local artists painted benches to be used by park visitors. The artists included Jordan Casale, Laramie Farris, Nancy Partida, Abby Murray, Wade Christian and Cheyenne Ortner. During the afternoon kindergarteners through sixth graders got to design and paint their own bench.

Lunch and afternoon music was furnished by Lulu LaFever. LaFever sang roadhouse swing, jazz and blues compositions accompanying herself on the guitar. Lunch was available from the Vault Creamery and Family, Career and Community Leaders of America.

To round off the day a short skit from the Children's Theatre production of "The Fairy Tale Network" was presented. The full play will be given during fair week. The play was about a mean cat who terrorized fairy tale characters into doing what she wanted. The fairy tale population was saved by a hero, who came to the rescue.

The newest Art in the Park was created by Cally Kirby Krallman, a former Goodland resident.

How to avoid poison ivy outdoors

You may have heard the phrase "leaves of three, let it be" when it comes to detecting poison ivy. Kansas State University horticulturists say it is a bit more complicated than that.

"The leaves of poison ivy can have a smooth edge or a coarsely toothed edge, or even a lobed edge," said Ward Upham, university extension agent in horticulture. "There are many different forms the leaves can take, so you need to look at other aspects of the plant."

Poison ivy also grows in many different forms. You can find it covering the ground, in a shrub or climbing up a tree.

Charlie Barden, Kansas State University forestry extension specialist, says poison ivy is often confused with other plants like Virginia creeper, fragrant sumac and box elder. He says there are three key identifiers to look for if you want to avoid taking home an unwanted souvenir this summer. The middle leaf of the poison ivy plant is on a longer stem than the other two leaves.

- The two outside leaves are attached directly to the main stem.
- The branch holding the poison ivy is brown, not green.

More than 90 percent of people are allergic to poison ivy, and it often takes 10 to 12 hours before the symptoms show.

"A poison ivy rash is different from a bug bite because it will start out just being red and irritated and then blisters will actually raise up," Barden said. "People say those blisters will spread and believe they are spreading the oil, but the spreading is just because it takes awhile for the reaction to occur."

Remedies are available for this pesky plant. One lotion on the market that contains clay particles can be applied before you go into the woods and will prevent the poison ivy rash from occurring.

Getting rid of the plant on your property also is a preventive step. Upham says to consider grubbing, where you remove the plant from the ground after it has rained. He recommends using an herbicide containing Triclopyr, which will be labeled as a brush killer. If the poison ivy is climbing up a tree, cut down the tree, then apply the herbicide to the stump.

If you can't get rid of the plant, it is best to avoid it altogether.

Researchers create better test for E. coli

Kansas State University diagnosticians are helping the cattle industry save millions of dollars each year by developing earlier and accurate detection of E. coli.

Lance Noll, master's student in veterinary biomedical science, Greensburg; T.G. Nagaraja, university distinguished professor of diagnostic medicine and pathobiology; and Jianfa Bai, assistant professor in the Kansas State Veterinary Diagnostic Laboratory, are leading a project to improve techniques for detecting pathogenic Shiga toxin-producing E. coli O157:H7. A U.S. Department of Agriculture Coordinated Agriculture Project grant is funding the work.

The researchers are part of a College of Veterinary Medicine team studying preharvest food safety in beef cattle. Noll has developed and validated a molecular assay that can detect and quantify major genes specific for E. coli O157.

"Developing a method to detect E. coli before it can potentially contaminate the food supply benefits the beef industry by preventing costly recalls but also benefits the consumer by ensuring the safety of the beef supply," Noll said.

The newly developed test is a molecular assay, or polymerase chain reaction, that detects bacteria based on genetic sequences, which are the bacteria's "fingerprints," Nagaraja said. The test is rapid and less labor-intensive than existing detection methods. The method can be automated and test many samples in a short period of time.

The test can be used in a diagnostic or research laboratory to accurately detect E. coli and can help with quality control in cattle facilities.

"The novelty of this test is that it targets four genes," Nagaraja said. "We are constantly working on finding better and more sensitive ways to detect these pathogens of E. coli in cattle feces."

To develop the diagnostic test, Noll and Nagaraja worked with two Kansas State University molecular biologists: Xiaorong Shi, research assistant of diagnostic medicine and pathobiology, and Bai.

"Beef cattle production is a major industry in Kansas and Kansas State University has a rich tradition in the research of beef cattle production and beef safety," Noll said. "As a graduate student in veterinary biomedical sciences, I am proud to be a member of a multidisciplinary team in the College of Veterinary Medicine that aims to make beef a safe product for the consumers."

Noll was named a winner at the 11th annual Capitol Graduate Research Summit this spring for his research project and poster, "A four-plex real-time PCR assay for the detection and quantification of Escherichia coli O157 in cattle feces."

Book features recipes from Kansas State

Jane P. Marshall wrote "Teatime to Tailgates: 150 Years at the K-State Table" to celebrate Kansas State University's sesquicentennial.

Now Marshall is celebrating a special honor. Her book has been named a Kansas Notable Book of 2014 by the State Library of Kansas. Marshall is a food journalist and culinary historian who teaches food writing in the hospitality management and dietetics department in the university's College of Human Ecology.

"Teatime to Tailgates" was among 15 books earning the Notable Book honor this year. A committee of Kansas Center for the Book affiliates, fellows, librarians and authors of previous Kansas Notable Books selects books to be considered for the honor, all of which were published in the previous year. The State Library then selects the honorees. Marshall will join the other authors at a recognition ceremony Sept. 13.

"What a thrill to be in such august company — the company of the other Notable Book authors and, of course, the farmers, cooks, researchers, professors, inventors, pioneers and Kansas State graduates who made "Teatime to Tailgates" possible," Marshall said

Published by the College of Human Ecology, "Teatime to Tailgates" features stories and recipes from 1863-2013 about the university's rich food heritage.

The book encompasses the entire university, from Call Hall's ice cream parlor to Van Zile's dining room, from Cowboy Cabbage cooked in a cast iron pan to the Kansas State Student Union's crown rolls.

The 256-page hardcover reveals "gritty professor, itchy-footed explorers and talented graduates who changed by the world by changing how people, grow, select, prepare and eat their food," Marshall said.

Enjoy a night at the movies!

Remember to celebrate the 4th of July safely

Using consumer fireworks on our nation's birthday is as American as apple pie, backyard barbecues and parades on Main Street. While fireworks are used as part of the holiday celebration, it is important to remember that fireworks can be dangerous if not handled properly. "Many fireworks related injuries can be avoided by following a few common sense rules," says Doug Jorgensen, state fire marshal. The office of the state fire marshal offers these common sense safety tips for using consumer fireworks in the hopes that injuries to consumers can be greatly reduced this season:

- Parents and caretakers should always closely supervise teens if they are using fireworks.
- Parents should not allow young children to handle or use fireworks.

- Fireworks should only be used outdoors.
- Always have water ready if you are shooting fireworks.
- Know your fireworks. Read the caution label before igniting.
- Obey local laws. If fireworks are not legal where you live, do not use them.
- Alcohol and fireworks do not mix.

- Wear safety glasses whenever using fireworks.
- Never relight a "dud" firework. Wait 20 minutes and then soak it in a bucket of water.
- Soak spent fireworks with water before placing them in an outdoor garbage can.
- Avoid using homemade fireworks or illegal explosives. They can kill you!

- Report illegal explosives, like M-80s and bottle rockets, to the fire or police department.
- And note these special safety tips, if using sparklers:
 - Always remain standing while using sparklers.
 - Never hold a child in your arms while using sparklers.
 - Never hold, or light, more than one sparkler at a time.

- Never throw sparklers.
- Sparkler wire and stick remain hot long after the flame has gone out. Be sure to drop spent sparklers in a bucket of water.
- Teach children not to wave sparklers, or run, while holding sparklers.

Be aware of pets around noisy, exploding fireworks

The Fourth of July is almost here! As we celebrate our independence with family, friends, cookouts and fireworks, it is important to think about our pets' safety. Fourth of July festivities can be very stressful for pets, especially the noisy fireworks, and the American Veterinary Medical Association wants to share some tips to help keep our pets - and us - stress-free over the holiday.

1. Stay inside. Keep pets indoors far away from the noise. Having some background noise, playing can be helpful too.
2. Know your pet's stressors. If you already know that your pet is stressed by loud noises, consider having your veterinarian prescribe appropriate anti-anxiety medication.
3. Avoid fireworks. Keep pets far away from exploding fireworks.

Even though many pets don't have a fear of the noise initially, they can develop it over time. Pets that are near fireworks when they go off may also become spooked and run away.

4. Have your pet properly identified. Make sure your pet has accurate ID tags in case your pet is scared by the noise and runs away. It is also helpful to have a recent photo of your pet to make lost posters. For a more permanent solution, consider microchipping your pet.

5. Make sure your pet is calm. Keep your pet in a cool location with fresh, clean drinking water. This will help keep your pet relaxed.
6. Consider isolating your pet if he or she doesn't like company. Extra people around the house can be stressful for pets, so keeping your pet away from the festivities will help your guests enjoy the party and your pet enjoy some much-deserved quiet time.

7. Don't give your pet "people food." It may seem harmless, but many human foods are toxic to pets, including onions, grapes and raisins, avocados and chocolate.
8. Keep your pet away from plastic cups, containers and glow jewelry. Pets can hurt themselves on plastic if they chew it, and they could also develop gastrointestinal irritation if they swallow plastic.

9. Leave your pet at home if you go to a fireworks show. Pets may be allowed at the venue, but being that close to fireworks could be stressful for your pet. Let your pet stay where it feels safe, comfortable and relaxed.
10. Keep matches, lighter fluid and Citronella away from your pet. These products can cause irritation to your pets if ingested, inhaled or touched.

from our viewpoint...

Obamacare could still be overruled

By now there exist few defenders of the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act, nicknamed Obamacare, which has shown itself to be neither affordable or capable of protecting the patient – especially from government managed plans. The “list of horrors” was mind boggling from day one, October 1, 2013, beginning with glitches for the first three months, then implementation extensions until December 15, then March 31, 2014, to keep afloat what clearly most Americans did not want. President Barack Obama extended exemptions to unions and to congressional staffs to limit opposition.

The oft-repeated promises that one could keep his doctor and insurance plan came to be seen as Obama lies as 5.5 million, previously satisfied Americans, received notices of insurance cancellations because the private plans they had did not fit the new mandates. An avalanche of horror stories followed. One business manager of a distinguished medical group complained of the problem of just having a phone conversation with a government healthcare representative, “If you get through at all it’s 30 to 60 minutes, and then you have to get to the right person because rules change daily and too many times you aren’t given good information.”

The Supreme Court also will get chances to rule the defective law unconstitutional. Yes, in a 5 to 4 majority it ruled Obamacare a tax, which, as such, is now very problematic and guarantees a return of the issue to them. The Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act did not originate in the House of Representatives as required in Article I, Section 7, Clause 1, “All Bills for raising Revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives.” It originated in the Senate. After the Supreme Court ruling, Senate Majority Leader Harry Reid gutted the language in a previously House bill, but with an earlier date, and deceptively replaced it with the language of the Senate bill to look like it had originated in the House, but it did not.

The Court ruling on Hobby Lobby, argued in mid March, is due any time. The question directly before the justices is whether for-profit corporations must provide insurance coverage for contraception, mandated by Obamacare. Hobby Lobby, a chain of crafts stores, challenged the requirement, saying it conflicts with the company’s religious principles. If the contraception challenge succeeds, it strikes down only a small part of Obamacare but several little challenges over time could weaken the law to oblivion. A strict interpretation of the Constitution would give an easy victory for Hobby Lobby as there exists no role for the federal government in Article I, Section 8 for contraception, insurance, or health legislation, nor in any amendment processed thereafter. Moreover, tax revenues were designed to be spent only for constitutional purposes – not for any purposes.

A potential constitutional challenge is found in the list of limitations on the Congress with respect to making law found in Article I, Section 9, “No Capitation, or other direct Tax shall be laid, unless in Proportion to the Census or Enumeration herein before directed to be taken.” Only the federal income tax (Amendment 16) is exempted from the proportional enumeration requirement. If the federal mandate is a tax, and not a fee, as stated by the Supreme Court, it is unconstitutional because Congress did not apportion that tax among the states according to population.

Yes, National Healthcare has shown itself to be an albatross around our necks but the Constitution can still protect us from our own ignorance if we will elect only those who will be guided by it and that would exclude many presently holding office.

Hope at last for space exploration

Everyone has a political axe to grind. Maybe you care the most about immigration, or ethanol subsidies or the Lesser Prairie Chicken.

Mine is the space program.

I watched the final launch of the Space Shuttle Atlantis in 2011 (on my birthday, coincidentally). Sadly I was never able to be in Florida for a launch, but this one was broadcast live over the internet. It heralded an era where the United States took a back seat in manned spaceflight. As someone who has always been fascinated by space and the exploration thereof, this was a dark time.

For the past three years American astronauts have been forced to use Russian ships to get to the International Space Station. Imagine that, the country that landed a dozen men on the moon now has to hitch rides from the Russians just to get off the ground. We pay huge sums of money for it, in fact. And we have poor relations with Russia right now. Our access could get cut off at any time due to dirt-side politics.

There are things we do well. NASA has probes out there further than anything any human has sent before. There’s solar and Earth observation, the Mars rover, Cassini and its pictures of Saturn and many more successful unmanned research missions.

For years I’ve been advocating that the United States needs to retake its position at the forefront of manned space exploration. And news came last week that makes me hopeful once again.

Orion, the next American manned spacecraft, is getting its first test mission this December.

Orion is a capsule design, very similar to the Apollo spacecraft that took us to the moon. Service and crew modules will be mounted on top of an enormous, multi-stage Delta IV

kevin bottrell

• simple tricks and nonsense

rocket – and later, a brand new and even larger rocket. The service module has the engine, air and water storage and fuel. The crew module seats four and is set up for anywhere from 21 to 210 days of spaceflight.

The agency has been testing individual systems, such as the parachutes that will help the capsule land safely, but the December launch will be the first time the new ship has gone into space.

Its first mission will be an unmanned test that will send the ship into high orbit, 3,600 miles above the surface of the Earth. Doesn’t sound very exciting, but you have to crawl before you can walk, especially with something as difficult and dangerous as inter-planetary travel. This test mission will give NASA valuable data about the launch abort system, the heat shield, computers and, most importantly, radiation.

Orion will be heading out far beyond the orbit of the International Space Station, into a region of high radiation levels that surrounds the Earth. The only manned spacecraft to have traveled through this region, known as the Van Allen Belts, are the Apollo missions. Orion crews will be spending a lot more time beyond the Earth’s protection, and NASA will have to see what kind of radiation exposure they will be subject to and how well the ship’s shielding can cope.

Orion grew out of the ashes of another program, Constellation, which was cancelled by the Obama Administration during a round of budget tightening in 2011. Much of the Orion capsule design was made for that program, and after its cancellation, it was carried forward into the new project.

I understand the arguments against space exploration. It is expensive to be sure, and with this countries problems, there are good arguments to be made that the money could be spent elsewhere. However, I have always believed that government shouldn’t just be about taxes, food stamps, welfare and military. It should also help inspire us to patriotism.

I wasn’t around for the moon landing. But I can imagine the pride and inspiration that all Americans must have felt to see Neil Armstrong and Buzz Aldrin making those first steps onto another world. We can experience that again, and in an age where so many Americans are so often disgusted with the actions of their government, what could be more important?

It will be many years before Orion is ready to go on its voyages, but I’m encouraged that we are finally embarking on the next step, and that its culmination will be within my lifetime, something I had despaired of seeing. It will, as long as everything goes well, take us further than any human has been. To me, that is the whole point, to go further, to look beyond the horizon and discover things that will change us and our world forever. I believe that any cost is worth the effort when taking those next steps.

After all, although it may sound cliché, I’ve always felt we should adhere to a saying from my favorite television show, that we should always endeavor to go boldly where no one has gone before.

Learning to love and respect our flag

Some of the older men in our community felt we scouts were not performing our responsibilities in handling the flag as respectfully as we should. Therefore, just before the Fourth of July, we found ourselves in a meeting where a gentleman had been invited to talk to us about it.

“Great!” Lenny quipped, looking at the man who was waiting for his turn to speak. “Just what I wanted to be doing on a Tuesday night. Sitting around and listening to some old guy I don’t even know talk about the flag. The flag just isn’t that big of a deal.”

We all nodded our heads in agreement. It was a beautiful, clear evening, just right to be swimming, or playing baseball, or anything out of doors, not the kind of day to be spent in a meeting.

The man that was going to talk to us really wasn’t that old; he was probably in his late forties or early fifties, but to teenage boys, that is ancient.

When it was his turn, he looked at us and smiled. “You know, I can’t instill in you a love for the flag and a feeling of respect. I can only tell you why I love it.” He then proceeded to tell us a story that enthralled us.

As a young soldier, he had been assigned to the Philippines during the beginning of World War II. That was where he was when the Japanese attacked Pearl Harbor. He described how only a little more than a week later the Japanese attacked the Philippines. With the United States’ ships destroyed, there was no means to receive supplies, and within only a few months, there was no option except surrender.

He then described the Bataan death march, and what it was like to watch many of his friends die from disease, starvation, and the guns and bayonets of the Japanese. He said there were many times he wished he could die from other pens

• daris howard

too, rather than endure the atrocities. When they reached their destination, the camp they were interred in was not much better. Food was scarce and less than adequate. Many more died, and those who lived seemed to lose hope. They were not told of anything going on in the outside world, and they began to think they had been forgotten.

But after a couple of horrible years, some British soldiers, that had been captured in the fighting in Australia, were brought as prisoners to their camp. Everyone learned from them that the Allied forces were moving island by island, and coming toward the Philippines. Excitement and hope soared as the dream of possible deliverance grew brighter. But then, just when they could hear the bombardment and knew the Allied forces were approaching, many of the prisoners were loaded onto ships for transport to prison camps in Japan.

They found themselves in the hot, humid hold of a Japanese ship that was full of foul smells that burned their eyes and choked their lungs. They were packed so tightly that they were forced to stand 24 hours per day. As they heard the continuation of the bombardment from the American planes everyone cheered, even though they knew their own ship could be inadvertently sunk by a stray bomb. As the days grew long, and more people grew sick and died in their floating prison, when bombs would be heard around them, some men would call out, “Hit us! Hit us!” hoping to die instead of endure any more.

When they reached the shores of Japan, they were herded into a prison camp where they found other emaciated inmates. They received very little food or water, and disease and death continued to be their constant companions. However, after some time, their treatment began to improve. Word was that it was because the Japanese were beginning to fear retribution as their loss in the war seemed more and more imminent.

He told us about the day an American plane flew overhead and dropped food into their camp. He said seeing the flag on the side of the plane thrilled him as much as the food. “But,” he added, “nothing will ever compare to the day we saw a contingent of men approaching holding the American flag.”

His voice choked as he continued. “That flag symbolized the freedom I had always taken for granted when I was young, and had only learned to cherish when it was no longer mine. I will forever love it. I know you can never feel the same as I do about it, at least not unless you experience the loss of your freedom that it stands for. But I hope in some small way, you can learn from those of us who have been there how valuable that freedom is and the flag that symbolizes it.”

And we did learn. And every time I see that beautiful flag, I imagine myself imprisoned, and seeing it once more, and I know I will never think of it in the same way again. And even more, I pray that it will wave free and strong forever.

Fort Hays teacher programs get top rating

A national non-profit with the stated mission of "ensuring that every child has an effective teacher" has issued its second ranking of teacher preparation programs across the nation, and Fort Hays State University is one of only seven institutions nationally to have two programs that achieve Top Rank status.

In an extensive review by the National Council on Teacher Quality, a Fort Hays State program in history and government was the third-highest ranked secondary education program in the nation, and the university had the 12th-highest ranked elementary education program nationally out of 2,400 programs assessed.

No other Kansas institution, public or private, earned a Top Rank score.

The rankings were announced by then-President Edward H. Hammond in a news conference in June.

"This is yet more confirmation of our dedication to quality as well as to low cost," said former President Hammond. "In teacher education as in so many other areas, our commitment is not just to access, but access to the highest quality education, both on campus and in our Virtual College. This is especially important in teacher education, because that is training the people into whose care we entrust our children and grandchildren at the very beginning of their educations."

"Teacher Prep Review 2014," issued by the National Council on Teacher Quality, evaluated about 2,400 elementary, secondary and special education programs in 1,127 institutions of higher education. In 836 of those institutions, the council was able to gather enough data to rank at least one program on all "key standards" in three areas: selection (the standard for admission to teaching programs), content preparation and practice teaching.

In the 12-state Midwest Region stretching from Kansas north through North Dakota and east to Ohio and Michigan, Fort Hays State's secondary education program was No. 1, ahead of undergraduate and graduate secondary education programs at Miami University of Ohio at No. 2 and 3, a University of Iowa undergrad secondary program at No. 4 and then two programs at Ohio State at No. 5 and No. 6.

Of the 1,668 individual programs that earned enough points to be ranked in the 2014 Review, only 26 elementary programs and 81 secondary programs earned the council's Top Ranked designation. Only three institutions nationwide had three programs in the top rank, and Fort Hays State was one of only seven that had two. Those 10 institutions were the only colleges and universities that had more than one Top Rank program.

President Hammond explained that the council rankings are based on points -- the higher the point total, the higher the ranking. Points are given according to how a particular program in a given institution meets a number of standards in the three core areas.

In elementary education, the council's "key standards" are, in addition to the selection criteria and student teaching components, early reading, elementary mathematics and elementary content. "Booster standards," areas which can add to a program's point total and ranking, are training to teach English language learners and struggling readers, classroom management, and outcomes.

In secondary education, in addition to the selection and student teaching standards, points are awarded on the basis of middle school content and high school content. Booster standards in secondary education are classroom management, secondary teaching methods and outcomes.

"The NCTQ rankings are not based solely on the information given to them by the institution," said President Hammond. "The Council asks the university for information, but it also reaches out to the school districts that partner with teacher education programs and it conducts online searches."

And, he said, "Because the Council has found a surprising amount of resistance in some institutions to the work it is trying to do, the Council has also developed its own contacts with individual people on campuses across the country in order to get the documentation it needs to make its assessments."

President Hammond noted that the particular secondary education program at the university cited by the council was the program in history and government. At Fort Hays State, the content requirements for a student preparing for a career teaching in middle school or high school amount to a double major:

"Our extensive focus on the content area of a teacher's education is one of the greatest strengths of Fort Hays State," said the president. "It is no surprise to us that, in a ranking system where subject-matter content is one of the pillars of judgment, we do well. Our commitment to quality in all aspects of teacher education tells in our graduates, and now the National Council on Teacher Quality has also recognized it."

Lucas is 'flushed with pride'

By Ron Wilson
Director
Huck Boyd National Institute for Rural Development
at Kansas State University
 Have you ever visited a community that is flushed with pride – and I mean that literally? Today we'll learn about a rural community which is a center of grassroots art. The community's latest project involves, well, a toilet.

the Grassroots Art Center, Lucas hosted a grand opening celebration of its new public restroom on June 2, 2012. What is the new restroom like? Well, it's quirky.

The restroom is set in what is called the Bowl Plaza which is shaped like a giant toilet with an oval shape sunk into the ground so that people can sit on the edge. A six-foot porcelain artistic creation shows swirling water with items individuals have accidentally dropped into toilets. The 14-foot mosaic "lid" is always up. Inside the giant "tank" are sanitary facilities for men and women. A mock concrete giant toilet paperroll sits nearby and unfurls into the sidewalk. There's a giant hubcap handle created by Bob Mix, Great Bend grassroots artist. Maybe you can jiggle it to stop the imaginary water running.

The entire facility is a monument to mosaic grassroots art. Murals made with recycled materials are incorporated throughout the bowl plaza. The ladies' room is highlighted by a woman's tresses cascading on the walls, decorated with a refined feminine mosaic motif. The men's room is decorated with miniature cars, trucks, tractors, fishing, toys, game pieces, and more.

The fun didn't stop there. For the grand opening, and as a way to help defray the costs, the group auctioned off the opportunity to be the first person to flush the new toilet. The winning bid was $430, and that person got the honor of the first official flush. In fact, the top bidders were treated like royalty - literally.

"We crowned 'em," Rosslyn said. Paper crowns and flowing capes were given to the top bidders who walked to the bowl plaza in a formal procession. Of course, that makes this activity a, um, royal flush.

"It was kind of like a military wedding where the bride and groom walk under a line of drawn sabers," Rosslyn said. "Only we were holding up plungers and toilet bowl brushes," she said with a smile.

As was hoped, all this fun generated lots of attention. The guest register at the Bowl Plaza shows that visitors have come to this art attraction from 50 states and 47 countries -- very impressive for a community of 427 people. Now, that's rural.

Have you ever seen a community flushed with pride? Lucas, Kansas should be proud of its role as a grassroots art center. We salute Rosslyn Schultz and the people of Lucas for making a difference with offbeat creativity and fun, even in providing a public restroom. Some comments left by visitors are: "Bowled me over," "Going in style," and "Super duper pooper!"

And there's more. One artist in Lucas has made a big success out of tiny things. We'll learn about that in the conclusion of our three-part series next week.

G.H. Garrett came to Goodland in 1903 to work for the railroad. He started a general store in 1906 in what is now the north half of the Goodland State Bank.

Clara (Nass) Garrett arrived in Goodland by wagon train in 1886. Her folks homesteaded southwest of Goodland. She traveled to town to see the first Rock Island train come to Goodland.

Like puzzles? Then you'll love sudoku. This mind-bending puzzle will have you hooked from the moment you square off, so sharpen your pencil and put your sudoku savvy to the test!

Here's How It Works:

Sudoku puzzles are formatted as a 9x9 grid, broken down into nine 3x3 boxes. To solve a sudoku, the numbers 1 through 9 must fill each row, column and box. You can figure out the order in which the numbers will appear by using the numeric clues already provided in the boxes. The more numbers you name, the easier it gets to solve the puzzle!
