Wheat harvest is under way

The winter wheat is being cut all across Sherman County. Farmers are reporting varying yields – anywhere from four bushels an acre to 40 in one field to 15 to 60 in another-due to inconsistent moisture, hail storms and lingering drought conditions. According to Kansas State University experts, the state may be looking at one of the worst harvests on record. In a release issued Wednesday, Mary Knapp, service climatologist in the university's agronomy department, said the rains came too late to affect the crop, and that a poor harvest will affect all sectors of the economy. Photo by Pat Schiefen/The Goodland Star-News

July is good time for stopping grubs

If you plan on using a grub preventative on your lawn, the first half of July is a good target date for most products. Preventatives are normally used on areas that have had a history of grub problems. Traditional grub insecticides such as Dylox or carbaryl (Sevin) are normally applied in late July after grubs are present or as a rescue treatment once damage is seen. Products that contain Merit (imidacloprid) are considered grub preventers. Actually, neither product prevents grubs, but rather they kill grubs when they are quite small, and long before they from our viewpoint...

Voters have a clear choice this year

Kansas voters won't be able to say they don't have a choice for governor this fall. In fact, the choice has seldom been more clear.

The Republican candidate – assuming Gov. Sam Brownback wins the primary against Jennifer Winn, which seems likely – promises to continue cutting the state's budget and the income tax. Under his prompting, the Legislature has cut something like $800 million to $900 a year from the state's income-tax bite while holding onto a .45 from a .6 of 1 percent sales tax increase passed in the last administration.

Brownback and his allies have halted the growth of state government, which had gone on year after year – no matter which party was in power – for the last half century. He says he'll continue to cut spending and taxes while protecting schools and a few other programs.

The Democrat, on the other hand, promises to undo the "damage" allegedly done by the governor and conservative Republicans in the last four years. Rep. Paul Davis of Lawrence, the long-time minority leader in the Kansas House, won't say exactly how he plans to restore the cuts to education and other programs, however.

The unspoken promise is that he'll raise taxes. No one has really pressed Mr. Davis on this issue so far, even as partisan reporters and partisan editors trumpet his campaign appearances. Thoughtful, neutral observers such as Professor Chapman Rackaway at Fort Hays State University, wonder when he'll be put on the spot.

The obvious answer is, unless he's going to continue Mr. Brownback's policies, he's going to have to raise taxes. So far, Dr. Rackaway writes, Rep. Davis has said only that if elected, he would appoint a commission to study the issue.

"In simple terms," the political scientist wrote, "Brownback has lowered taxes. If Brownback's tactic was as disastrous as Davis claims, the answer is to raise them. But this is politics, and it's never that simple."

Even if Mr. Davis does admit he'd raise taxes, however, it seems unlikely that the fall campaign will see much change in the Legislature, where allies of the governor – and many who are, if anything, much more conservative – likely could block any tax increase.

The result might be four more years of Brownback policies without Mr. Brownback, assuming Mr. Davis were to be elected. And while he claims a lead in some polls, a Davis victory seems far from certain at this time.

For one thing, the veteran House member is not exactly a household name. When voters realize that the only logical answer to the big question is that he will back more spending and higher taxes, they may think twice before they toss out the one they know.

Between now and election time, we're all going to hear a lot more about both men. This campaign has aroused national interest. Liberal forces – Democrats, public-employee unions, those who believe in big government – see the Brownback cuts as a real threat to their policies nationwide. They will throw millions into this campaign, as will conservative groups that see great success in the governor's policies.

But that's OK. It just means voters will have a real choice: Smaller government and lower taxes, or bigger government and higher taxes. Which do you like? - Steve Haynes

The white combine calls

Tuesday, June 24 arrived like most mornings in Finney County. The only difference -humidity levels were high and the dew point skied off the chart.

Two inches of rain the last couple days after nearly four years of drought concerned veteran farmer Dwane Roth. He believed conditions were ripe for a serious storm.

Shortly after noon, a cloud bank began forming on the northern horizon. Throughout the afternoon it gradually moved closer and closer to his fields north of Highway 50. At 3:45 the rain began falling slow and easy.

But not for long. In little more than a minute marble-sized hail stones dropped straight down. A couple minutes later, hail the size of golf balls started blowing horizontally.

Within five minutes, the sky turned white and the wind blew so hard visibility dropped to less than 100 feet. Reports of hail a foot deep

The white combine (hail) left a swath of destruction seven miles long and five miles wide approximately eight miles northwest of Holcomb. The aftermath was devastating.

Wheat ready for harvest was hammered by the storm. The next day, the heads, stripped clean by the hail, drooped in the bright morning sun. Plump, golden berries covered the ground between rows and the promise of a 70

Insight this week

bushel-per-acre irrigated crops evaporated as the white combine reaped its wrath.

A beautiful, chest-high corn crop also met a similar fate. Stalks lay twisted and broken while the leaves were left torn and tattered. Some of the crop lay pummeled into the soil and the corn left standing stood less than knee Bruised and battered corn stalks are prone to disease, especially when they're growing as fast as they are at this time, Roth said. Stock rot and lodging could result in major losses. One veteran farmer pulled up in his pickup, stepped out and looked to the west at one of his fields of corn. "It looked pretty crappy," he said. "My dad always told me after a bad storm you should take off and go fishing for a week, but he never

When asked how he slept the night after the storm and before he could survey the damage the next morning, he replied while interjecting some patented western Kansas humor.

"I slept just fine," he smiled. "I'm a good Catholic with a clean conscience and we always sleep well - even after farming for nearly 50 years."

Then he added as he cocked his head to the right and looked me squarely in the eyes, "I'd much rather be looking at this crop than looking at you, if you were my doctor, telling me I had six weeks to live."

Always able to look at the bigger picture, many of the Finney County farmers surveying the damage believed their corn crop would come back. Some even hoped they'd harvest at least half a crop if no more hail hit their farms. With years of farming under their belts, most of these farmers understand that by the end of June there's little they can do but wait and see how the rest of the growing season pans out. "This is usually the way it goes out here,"

Roth said rolling the battered corn stalk in his hands. "When you come out of a drought you're going to get some significant weather. So many times the results aren't what you hope for."

And what about the drought that has lasted for years, especially in southwestern Kansas?

"You know they say farmers are the eternal optimists and I'm hoping it's over, Roth said. "I'm not certain it is. But hey – I'm breathing, we're going to be OK."

Rural areas deserve 21st Century education

By Sen. Jerry Moran and Ajit Pai

As sons of rural Kansas, we are committed to ensuring that children who grow up in the Sunflower State receive the same educational opportunities as students anywhere in America.

One of the tools for making certain rural students receive a 21st century education is broadband Internet access. With an Internet connection, where you live doesn't determine what information and resources you can ac-

Congress recognized the importance of offering all students access to technology when it directed the Federal Communications Commission to create the E-Rate program nearly 20 years ago. Today, that program distributes more than $2 billion every year to help schools and libraries connect to the Internet; every American who has phone service contributes to the E-Rate fund through charges on his or her monthly bill.

The bad news is this federal program meant to close the digital divide is actually making it worse for rural schools. A few common sense reforms, including simplifying the application process and providing certainty to schools, could fix that.

money per-student than those in wealthier, urban areas. For example, E-Rate distributes to students in Washington roughly three times the amount that a Kansas student's school receives – even though our nation's capital has a much larger tax base and broadband is cheaper there than in rural Kansas.

in the Senate

These disparities undermine E-Rate's core mission of giving rural schools the same technological tools as their urban and suburban counterparts.

One reason for this unfair distribution is the complex E-Rate application process. To apply for this money, schools must complete a seven-step process with six application forms spanning 17 pages – and that's just for basic service. If a school wants to invest in a technology the federal government does not consider a priority, additional paperwork is required.

All of this means that it is expensive and burdensome to apply, forcing some schools to divert money away from the classroom in order to hire consultants to help them navigate the process. Other schools just give up because they just don't have the budget to hire consultants, accountants or lawyers.

Administrative delays and missteps result Schools in rural areas routinely get less in E-Rate collecting about $400 million more from American consumers each year than it instead of going to help out schools in need.

On top of the complicated application process, E-Rate doesn't give schools a budget.

Urban schools at the front of the line often get as much as they want while rural schools at the back of the line must make do with what is left. The result is some schools using E-Rate to subsidize Blackberries for administrators while others can't even get money for classroom wi-fi.

To fulfill E-Rate's promise to all students. we must cut the bureaucracy and refocus the program on our children's needs. We must create a student-centered program.

Let's start by streamlining the process and cutting the initial application down to one page. All schools should be able to apply on their own without hiring a consultant. Let's speed up the funding process. Schools need certainty that E-Rate money will be there before - not after - they sign service contracts.

Next, let's fix the inequities in distributing the money. If we allocate E-Rate's budget on a per-student basis across every school in America, then every school board, every teacher, and every parent will know just how much is available.

If the money follows the student – with higher amounts for schools in rural or lowincome areas – we can better give schools the resources they need to connect the classroom.

Sen. Jerry Moran, a Republican of Manhatspends – money that sits in a bank account tan, is in his first term representing Kansas. Ajit Pai is a member of the Federal Communications Commission. This column originally appeared in The Wichita Eagle.

"Chikungunya virus can be a serious and debilitating disease, and we want travelers to be aware" said Robert Moser, MD, secretary and state health officer. "It is important for persons traveling to countries where chikungunya virus infections are currently reported to take appropriate precautions to prevent exposures to mosquito bites,"

Outbreaks of chikungunya virus, which is transmitted by mosquitoes, have occurred in countries in Africa, Asia, Europe, and the Indian and Pacific Oceans. Chikungunya was first established in the western hemisphere on St. Maarten, an island in the Caribbean, in December 2013. Additional cases have been identified in a total of 19 countries

Like puzzles? Then you'll love sudoku. This mindbending puzzle will have you hooked from the moment you square off, so sharpen your pencil and put your sudoku savvy to the test!

Here's How It Works:

Sudoku puzzles are formatted as a 9x9 grid, broken down into nine 3x3 boxes. To solve a sudoku, the numbers 1 through 9 must fill each row, column and box. Each number can appear only once in each row, column and box. You can figure out the order in which the numbers will appear by using the numeric clues already provided in the boxes. The more numbers you name, the easier it gets to solve the puzzle!
