Popular event to return for second year

One of the most popular new events from last year will be returning. The Glo Run will be held during the Flatlander Fall Festival weekend from 9 to 10 p.m. Saturday, Sept. 27, starting at Chambers Park.

Registration for the night run — which is being organized by the Goodland Activities Center and the Goodland Star-News — will begin at 8 p.m. in Chambers Park. The run will start at the corner of 13th and Sherman, and will take runners on a tour of Goodland.

Runners are encouraged to wear their brightest gear, and there will be plenty of glowsticks. Prizes are awarded to the top three participants with the best glowing outfit. The first run, held during Flatlanders last year, had 245 participants.

Registration is available at the GAC, 808 Main St., and the Star-News office, 1205 Main St. It is also available online at goodlandgac.com and GAC's Facebook page.

Cost is $20 for pre-registration, which includes a Glo Run shirt, or $15 without a shirt. Deadline to pre-register is Friday, Sept. 5.

You can still register the day of the race. Cost will be $25, and an additional $15 for a shirt, which will be ordered after the race and available for pickup later.

For more information contact Tess Smith at the GAC at (785) 890-7242 or Angela Bonham at the Star-News at (785) 899-2338.

County working on 2015 budget

By Kevin Bottrell

kbottrell@nwkansas.com

Sherman County is in the process of determining its budget for 2015, and as part of that process, the commissioners met with County Attorney Charles Moser on Tuesday, who is proposing about $5,000 more for his department's budget for next year.

Moser said the increases will mainly be in salaries and postage. The increase in labor is because his staff has been putting in overtime, mainly on drug cases. County Clerk Janet Rumpel said the department has taken in more than $16,000 in attorney's fees.

The commissioners had a work session scheduled for Wednesday to continue discussing the budget.

The commissioners also discussed tax sales with Moser. The commissioners are attempting to go to a yearly tax sale.

Moser said he is not a fan of the letter the county sends to people who are on the delinquent tax list. This warning allows people to come in and pay just enough to get off the list, he said, rather than the full amount. Moser said once the petition is filed, anyone who comes in has to pay the full amount to get off the list.

Moser said he has asked the commissioners of other counties where he serves to not send the letter. Klemm agreed with Moser's assessment, and said had the commissioners thought of this before the previous sale they would have done it this way.

Moser also urged the commissioners to add a requirement to the abstracting bid that it be completed within 60 days.

In other business, the commission:

- Met with Duane Wright and Justin Stasser with Northwest Kansas Emergency Medical Services, who delivered a quarterly report.

Highway Patrol out in force until Labor Day

With the Labor Day holiday fast approaching, the Kansas Highway Patrol will be participating in the second Special Traffic Enforcement Program campaign of the year. These campaigns are enforcements, funded by the Kansas Department of Transportation, in which officers can work additional hours during high-travel holiday periods.

The Labor Day campaign runs from Thursday through Monday, Sept. 1. The Patrol will be out actively looking for impaired drivers as part of the "You Drink. You Drive. You Lose" campaign. Troopers will also be looking for those not wearing seatbelts or not using child safety seats; those texting; and any others violating Kansas laws.

During the 2013 Labor Day holiday weekend, there were 378 crashes statewide (worked by all Kansas law enforcement agencies). Five people were killed in these crashes, and 154 were injured. Of the total crashes, 29 were alcohol-related. Two of the five fatal crashes were alcohol-related. The reporting period was from 6:00 p.m. the Friday prior to the holiday, through 11:59 p.m. the Monday of Labor Day.

With many celebrations across the state, drivers should make sure they are designating a sober driver. The Patrol would also like to remind motorists to wear their seatbelts and use the correctly fitted child safety seats, as they are the best defense should you be involved in a crash.

If you are in need of assistance on a Kansas highway, you can call the Patrol for assistance at *47 (*HP) or *582 (*KTA) for the Kansas Turnpike.

State seeks commission candidates

Grain growers in far western Kansas who plan to campaign for a seat on one of the state's five grain commodity commissions — corn, grain sorghum, soybeans, wheat or sunflowers — should be gathering petition signatures now to meet the Nov. 30 filing deadline.

The 2015 election will cover districts one, two and three; the western third of Kansas.

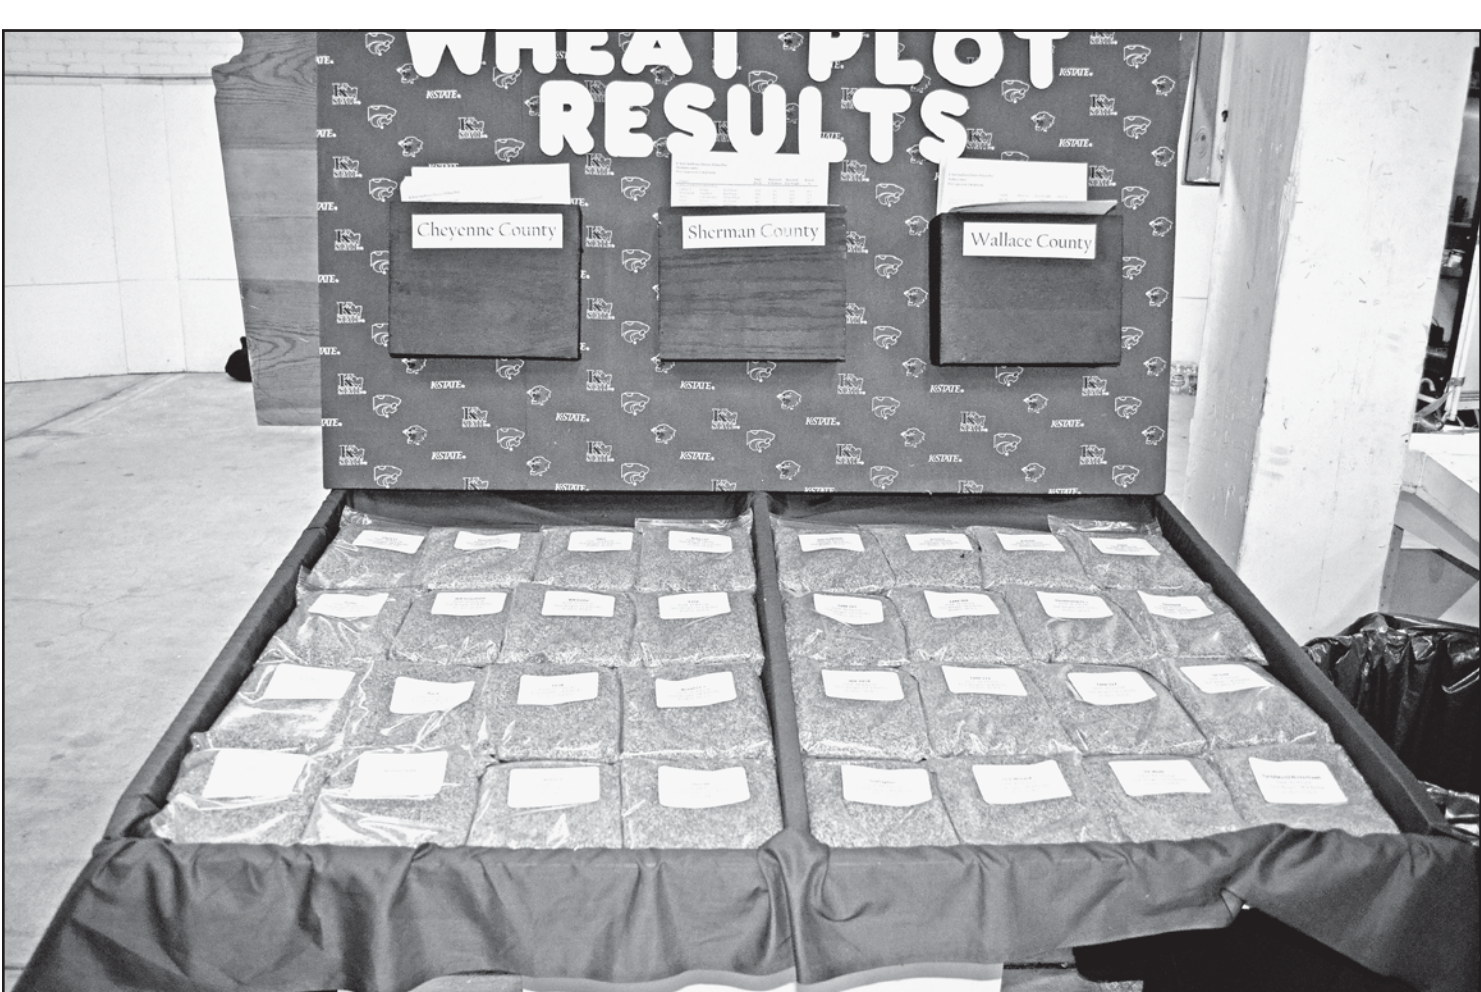

District one includes Cheyenne, Decatur, Graham, Norton, Rawlins, Sheridan, Sherman and Thomas counties.

To be eligible to run for any of the five commodity commissions the candidate must have been actively engaged in growing corn, grain sorghum, soybeans, wheat or sunflowers within the preceding three years.

Candidates must gather 20 signatures from eligible voters to be included on the 2015 ballot. No more than five signatures from any one county can be used to qualify a candidate.

Candidate registration packets are available from the Kansas Department of Agriculture or the grain commodity commissions.

Ruth E. (Briney) Ross

Ruth E. (Briney) Ross, 85, longtime Goodland resident, died Thursday, Aug. 14, 2014. Services are pending.

Arrangements are being handled by Koons Funeral Home, 211 N. Main, Goodland, Kan. 67735.

Robert “Bob” Otis Todd

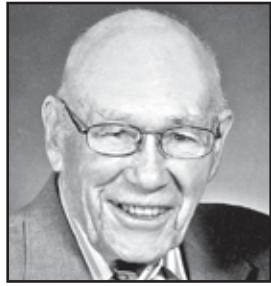

Robert “Bob” Otis Todd, 94, passed away peacefully at his home at the Good Samaritan Independent Living facility in Loveland Colorado, on August 10, 2014.

He was born February 20, 1920, the son of Elsie (Deay) and Otis Todd in Russell Springs, Kansas. When he was one year old, the family relocated to Goodland, Kansas, and in 1939, he graduated from Sherman Community High School in Goodland.

He married Ethelwyn Ione Moore on July 16, 1941, and they recently celebrated seventy-three years of marriage. They had one daughter and three sons. Early on, he and Ione farmed with his father and brother. He was a veteran of World War II, serving in Europe in the 11th Armored Division, fighting in the Battle of the Bulge, and helping liberate prisoners of Giessen and Mauthausen concentration camps. After returning home, he worked in the Goodland United States Post Office. After twenty-seven years, he retired as Assistant Post Master in 1980.

Bob loved life, family, people, dancing, and card games, and was always whistling and laughing. He was adored by his grandkids, great-grandkids, nieces, and nephews, and their home was always open and welcome to anyone who stopped by. Modest by income, he completely built the family home on Walnut Street out of a granary that had been moved to Goodland from the farm. Over the years, he added rooms and remodeled it as the family grew. They relocated to Loveland, Colorado, in 2003.

Bob was an active member of the First Christian Church, both in Goodland and in Loveland, holding several leadership positions. He was a Life Time Member of the Veterans of Foreign Wars and the Elks Club in Goodland. He was able to see the World War II Memorial in Washington, DC, through the generous donations of Honor Flight, Loveland, Colorado, in 2010, which was a special event for him.

Surviving family includes his wife Ione, of seventy-three years, of Loveland, Colorado; grandson Clayton Todd (son of the late Robert Orvil Todd) of Prairie Village, Kansas; daughter Sheryl Martin and her husband Dan of Longmont, Colorado; grandsons Gregg, Craig, Steve, and Brian Martin and granddaughters Kelly Reynolds and Trish Isaacson; son Larry Todd and his wife Connie of Billings, Montana; grandson Clinton Todd and granddaughter Nichole Babiak; and son Gregory Todd and his wife Cheryl of Greeley, Colorado; grandsons Johnathan Todd and Jeremy Todd; and thirteen great-grandkids.

Preceding him in death were his son Robert Orvil Todd; grandson Scott Martin; sister Josephine Clara Hayden; and brothers Merton Orvil Todd and Delbert Dean Todd.

A Memorial Service will be held at the First Christian Church in Loveland, Colorado, on Friday August 15, at 1:00 PM.

A Graveside service will be held at the Goodland Cemetery in Goodland, Kansas, on Tuesday, August 19, at 1:00 PM MT, with Reverend Carol Edling Jolly officiating. Military honors will be provided by United States Army, Fort Riley, Kansas, and Veterans of Foreign Wars—Lowell Coleman Post 1133.

Memorials may be designated to Honor Flight, Inc., and may be left at the Graveside Service or mailed to Koons Funeral Home, 211 N Main, Goodland, KS 67735-1555.

Rule would trace ground meat sources

A recently proposed rule by the U.S. Department of Agriculture’s Food Safety and Inspection Service would require grocery stores and supermarkets to keep more documentation on ground beef sources, which could assist in more timely traceability of a particular beef source that may have caused a food borne illness.

The proposed rule would require retailers to keep records of all the sources of ground beef that they grind in-store, said Travis O’Quinn, assistant professor in the Department of Animal Sciences and Industry at Kansas State University.

Traditionally, he said, retailers combine beef purchased specifically for grinding with beef products that may have hit the end of their shelf-life in a whole muscle cut form, such as roasts and steaks, to create the ground beef products consumers see on shelves. This limits traceability to a specific source of potentially contaminated meat if a foodborne illness outbreak were to occur.

“Currently, there aren’t regulations that require those retailers to track what products, the amounts and the sources of those products that go into their store’s ground product. The proposed rule would change that,” O’Quinn said.

With the rule in place, consumers could potentially know about a ground beef product contaminated with E. coli, for example, more rapidly and hopefully before the product is consumed in the home, he said.

For retailers, the rule would require extra record keeping on products all the way through the grinding process, but O’Quinn said this extra work could save the retailers time down the road if they needed to help public health officials trace down a contaminated product.

The rule does not affect the beef ground and packaged prior to the retail level, as these pre-packaged, case-ready products are already sourced, he said. It is intended specifically for meat ground in-store.

“Because of the added record keeping, we may see more case-ready products coming directly from the packers and producers to the retail store, already in a shelf-ready state as opposed to grinding at the retail level,” O’Quinn said.

“This is just a proposal right now, so there is a 60-day time period where it will be open for comments, suggestions, thoughts and concerns,” he added. “The USDA will review those comments before it goes into effect.”

For more information about the proposed rule and to view or submit comments, visit www.fsis.usda.gov/wps/portal/ffsis/topics/regulations/federal-register/proposed-rules).

Kansas troopers remind citizens of safety rules

With students getting back to school, there are important safety reminders the Kansas Department of Transportation and the Kansas Highway Patrol would like to point out to students, parents and motorists in Kansas.

Tips for children

• Don't hurry getting on or off the bus. Arrive at least five minutes before the bus is scheduled.

• As the bus approaches, stand at least five giant steps (10 feet) away from the roadside and line up away from the street.

• Wait until the bus stops, door opens and the driver says it's OK before stepping onto the bus. Use handrails to avoid falls. Be careful that clothes, shoelaces, book bags or other items are secure and won't get caught on the handrail or door of the bus.

• If you have to cross the street in front of the bus, walk on the sidewalk or along the side of the road at least 10 feet ahead of the bus before you cross in front of it. Be sure the driver can see you, and you can see the driver. Never walk behind the bus and walk at least three giant steps away from the side of the bus.

• If you drop something, tell the driver, and then make sure the driver understands before you try to pick it up. They may not see you bending down. A child is less likely to drop something in traffic if they carry a backpack.

• Obey the bus driver, sit facing forward, use an inside voice and don't stick anything out the windows.

• Leave your distractions in your backpack. Everything can wait until you are safely in the school or in your home.

• Just because you are at a crosswalk doesn't mean that a driver is aware of you. Always look left-right-left again, before crossing the street.

Tips for drivers

• When backing out of a driveway or leaving a garage, watch out for children walking or riding to school.

• When driving in the neighborhoods with school zones, watch out for young people who may be thinking about getting to school, but may not be thinking about getting there safely.

• Slow down. Watch for children congregating near bus stops.

• Be alert. Children arriving late for the bus may dart into the street without looking for traffic.

• Know that it is illegal to pass a school bus stopped for loading or unloading. In Kansas, the fine for this potentially deadly violation is $315, plus court costs.

• If you see a bus ahead, slow down in preparation for its stop. It's easy to misjudge the speed at which you can overtake a bus, and they make frequent stops.

• Learn the flashing signal light system that school bus drivers use to alert motorists of pending actions. Never pass a bus when flashing lights are displayed.

Yellow flashing lights indicate the bus is preparing to stop to load or unload children. Motorists should slow down and prepare to stop.

Red flashing lights and an extended stop arm indicate the bus is stopped and children are getting on or off. Motorists must stop and wait until the red lights stop flashing, the extended sign is withdrawn and the bus begins moving before starting to drive again.

• While stopped behind a bus, motorists should put all distractions away and give their full attention to the road, and what is going on in and around the bus.

K-State's detector among top technologies

Kansas State University engineers have developed a lithium-based neutron detector that is being recognized as one of the year's Top 100 newly developed technologies.

R&D Magazine is recognizing Douglas McGregor, professor of mechanical and nuclear engineering, and his research team with a 2014 R&D 100 Award. The award recognizes the year's 100 most significant high-technology new products.

The university-developed lithium-based neutron detector, called the Li-Foil Neutron Detector, can be used for medical imaging, national security, scientific research, oil well logging and the automotive industry.

"We are honored to receive this international recognition for the collaborative efforts of students, faculty and researchers on our team," McGregor said. "All of the members of our team have worked very hard to advance this technology and take it to a whole new level. We continue to improve it and develop newer models."

An R&D 100 Award signifies that a product has merit as one of the most innovative new ideas of the year, nationally and internationally, and is recognized as a mark of excellence by national laboratories, universities, industrial companies and government agencies. The award honors technology developments that are designed to meet current or future societal, scientific or business challenges.

Researchers in McGregor's Semiconductor Materials and Radiological Technologies Laboratory, or SMART Laboratory, created the Li-Foil neutron detector. Other researchers involved include Kyle Nelson, research associate in mechanical and nuclear engineering; Steven Bellinger, research associate in mechanical and nuclear engineering; Niklas Hinson, recent bachelor's graduate in mechanical engineering; Goddard; and Benjamin Montag, doctoral student in nuclear engineering, Manhattan.

Nelson, who worked on the research for his doctoral project, created the neutron detector by stacking very thin sheets of lithium foil between multiple electrodes. Lithium-based neutron detectors are more cost-effective than helium-3 based neutron detectors.

"The relatively low cost of the detector is a direct result of the advancements in lithium foil manufacturing in the lithium battery industry," Nelson said.

Helium-3 is often used in neutron-based technology, but is rare and expensive, McGregor said. Lithium-6 is a metal that is highly reactive with neutrons and Kansas State University researchers have shown that it is a good alternative for neutron detection.

As a result, the lithium-based detector has several different applications, including stationary detectors that can be used at U.S. ports of entry, mobile backpack neutron detectors, and handheld devices.

"Our lithium-based technology seems to solve many of the problems in neutron detection," Nelson said. "Because lithium is less expensive, we have the capability to make some of the stationary detectors as big as bookshelves, which can help the detectors be even more accurate."

Bellinger, who founded the Manhattan-based start-up company called Radiation Detection Technologies Inc., is helping with the commercialization of the neutron detector. Saint Gobain Corp. also is helping to commercialize the technology.

The engineers have one patent on the research, with another patent pending, and continue to improve the technology behind the neutron detectors. Their work has been supported by the Defense Threat Reduction Agency.

from our viewpoint...

RIP Tod Tiahrt

Wichita-area voters apparently saw no appeal in a potential comeback for former Congressman Todd Tiahrt, consigning him to the political dustbin with a resounding 42,877-to-25,501 defeat by his successor, Rep. Mike Pompeo.

As he did against former Rep. Jerry Moran of Hays in 2010, Mr. Tiahrt ran a shrill, almost offensive campaign against the incumbent Republican who'd replaced him. Constant e-mails trumped every supposed slight or misstep by Rep. Pompeo.

The tone was reminiscent of the Senate race against Mr. Moran, which wound up with the western Kansas representative in Washington and the former union official looking for a job.

Apparently, it didn't set well with voters this time, either. Mr. Tiahrt apparently thought he had a chance this year to unseat his successor. Why he waited four years to try to reclaim his old seat, no one could say.

Back in 2010, when he hoped to step up and replace Sam Brownback in the Senate seat, Mr. Tiahrt ran snarky ads claiming that he was the "real" conservative in the race and portraying Rep. Moran as some sort of mushy middle of the roader.

The facts showed that in Congress and in the Kansas Senate, Mr. Moran had a solidly conservative voting record, focused on spending and budget issues. He voted against many bills backed by the Republican leadership in those heady days, including President George W. Bush's landmark No Child Left Behind Act, a massive federal intrusion into local schools, and other budget-busting bills.

Of course, Sen. Moran won the Republican primary by a good margin. We thought, or maybe hoped, that we'd heard the last of ex-Rep. Tiahrt as Rep. Pompeo took office that year.

It was not to be, however. Mr. Tiahrt tried to come back. Though we didn't get much of the advertising out here, except on Wichita television, the 4th District race got downright mean. The Tiahrt campaign continually attacked the incumbent, creating no end of ill will within the party.

Voters apparently weren't impressed, handing the incumbent a 63 percent-to-37 percent victory. Maybe Mr. Tiahrt will get the message this time.

After the coming shakeup in the Republican party, the GOP will need to put a premium on unity, especially the conservatives. The time for the kind of destructive campaigning Mr. Tiahrt specialized in will be past.

The party will need candidates who focus on their own positives and don't try to destroy other Republicans.

Mr. Tiahrt's is a lesson the entire GOP needs to take to heart.

Can-do attitude

Insight this week

• john schlageck

A century ago, when this state was populated mainly of farm and ranch families, it was a common sight to see neighbors helping neighbors. They swapped machinery. They loaned labor back and forth to work on harvest thrashing crews. A barn raising presented another opportunity for friends to help build and support the community.

Since Kansas was settled, farmers and ranchers have supported their communities. They've always appreciated Main Streets that are bright, clean and well maintained. They've participated in the school system, served on the county planning board, taught Sunday school and worked with other community organizations and activities. Farmers and ranchers have been part of the fabric that has made Kansas the viable state it is today.

Some people have the mistaken belief that government can control the economy and provide a better life for its citizens. This is unrealistic. Both for theoretical and practical reasons, governments are unable to control the economy or create jobs.

Kansans know this. Our communities have never stood idly by and waited for the federal government to care for them. Instead they have formed alliances to tackle community issues, foster business development and ensure an environment where they will continue to grow. Look to towns ravaged by tornadoes like Greensburg to see evidence of this.

Still, with the number of farm families dwindling each year, it is not enough for rural Kansas communities to have and follow a strategic plan for economic development. Such communities must not forget they need institutions that bring farmers into the communities on a regular basis.

This means places where rural and folk can gather. This means a place where they can talk about mutual interests — children, the high school football team, the remodeled library — just about anything that relates to the welfare and well-being of the area.

Restaurants, grocery stores, a church — active participation in the school system and involvement in farm and community organizations are all ways to rekindle interest. Leaders must, however, be willing to live in and become part of the community.

Vibrant communities thrive and grow when farmers retire in their towns or become involved in local affairs. Farmers, ranchers and businesses remain the key to growth and vitality in any rural area.

Agriculture has always been the crucial ingredient driving the economic machinery of our state. Kansans are proud of the leadership our agricultural community provides. Working together rural and urban, with progressive community leadership, we can improve our standard of living and the quality of life in Kansas.

Value of human life

During the Vietnam War, my mother, an otherwise sweet and compassionate person, said "they" (Vietnamese) don't value human life like we do, suggesting that I be more comfortable killing them. I never was comfortable with the idea of killing them, and so I didn't.

However, I still hear some people say that an "enemy" doesn't value human life like we do. Over the years, the enemy changes, but the refrain is the same: some people on "our" side believe that enemies think life is cheap and therefore expendable, to be easily sacrificed. These same people in our society believe that we, and probably our allies, think life is sacred, and only sacrificed in freely chosen heroic acts.

Whenever mass violence and war breaks out, the mainstream media decides (most often with the help of government spokespeople) who are the good guys and who are the bad guys, who is the enemy and who are the allies. Once this occurs, and media footage and commentary follow the script, it is surprising how many members of the public become comfortable with the killing of "enemy" people, especially when they are of another race, nationality, or

from other pens

Suddenly the term "enemy" expands to the whole population of people (civilians, children, the elderly) and they collectively become evil, treacherous, and targetable. We can justify our hard-heartedness towards this enemy by saying they do not value human life like we do.

We look at what the enemy has done to us, or our allies, and ignore what we, or our allies, have done to them. Through the entire news cycle, the mainstream media, selected public officials, and commentators continually feed this mismatch of perceptions. The psychological term for perceiving the enemy to be inhuman is called "enmification." Perversely, then, life becomes cheap for us, as long as it's lives of the enemy. Falsely seeing the enemy as evil, and then doing evil to them, is deeply ironic and doubly unethical.

What would the world look like if we took a compassionate view? It would look like the world that my international students in conflict resolution tell me about, a world where every culture has a spectrum of good people who just want to live their lives in peace, and extremes of people who have been driven to use violence out of fear or the evils of oppression.

Across the globe, we all similarly value life, but security fears, and campaigns for self-rule, often drive people to violence. They resort to violence because they have yet to learn the power and effectiveness of nonviolence, which has now been thoroughly studied to show how it has become much more effective than violence in creating security and democracy. Excusing violence against people by claiming that they don't value life is one of the greatest ethical oxymorons of our time. This practice should be abandoned forever.

Robert J. Gould, Ph.D., an ethicist syndicated by PeaceVoice, directs the Conflict Resolution Graduate and Undergraduate Programs at Portland State University.

Unseen consequences

Some people routinely extoll the benefits of handing out taxpayer money to a few chosen businesses, and now the City of Wichita wants to create a sales tax that would generate $90 million for business subsidies. Proponents say subsidies (cash payments, forgivable loans, earmarks, tax abatements, subsidized borrowing, etc.) are necessary for economic development; some even go so far as to call the practice 'essential' and 'critical.' Albert Einstein, on the other hand, might call it 'insanity,' as government has been giving away Other People's Money (OPM) for decades and still expect different results.

Subsidy proponents may have noble intentions but they don't consider the unseen consequences of their actions.

Dealing in OPM actually worsens economic conditions for those who don't receive subsidies. The lucky few recipients certainly benefit but their gains come at the expense of everyone else. Citizens pay higher taxes to generate the subsidies and shoulder the burden of tax abatements. Businesses not subsidized by taxpayers are also disadvantaged.

Washington University political science professor Nathan Jensen is co-author of a study that examined the use of subsidies in Kansas. A recent Wichita Eagle story about Jensen's research said "There is 'no evidence' that those oft-used tax incentive programs have any positive effect on job creation. In fact, by cutting into public funds that could have been used for other programs that, say, spur private investment or fund research, and by making it harder for employers who do not receive tax breaks to compete in the market, the programs may actually have a detrimental effect."

Jensen found that in the six years after incentives were awarded, "the firms who received incentives actually generated slightly fewer jobs than those that didn't receive incentives." The Eagle went on to say "After the initial bump resulting from their relocation, Jensen found that transplanted companies were no more likely to generate jobs than similar companies that were already operating in their state."

Proponents of subsidies, earmarks, etc. talk about the jobs they believe were "created" but they don't provide the whole story. Jensen's research says subsidies having little positive effect on job creation and the Sedgwick County jobs data certainly bears that out. According to the Bureau of Labor Statistics, private sector jobs grew just 1.1 percent between 2003 and 2013. Aerospace employment declined 8.8 percent even though the industry collected a lot of taxpayer money over that 10-year span.

It's fair to say that the aerospace decline is impacted by the global economy and should be discounted, but then economic development programs should not be credited for job growth in the education and health care sectors. The bureau counts many public school employees as private sector workers and Wichita's aging population is primarily responsible for the growth in health care.

Guess what? A grand total of 536 other private sector jobs were added in Sedgwick County, for a scant growth rate of 0.6 percent.

The growth in property tax collections, however, is considerable. According to the Kansas Department of Revenue, the City of Wichita increased taxes by 92 percent between 1997 and 2013; Sedgwick County taxes increased by 79 percent.

The best things government can do to promote job creation is to eliminate unnecessary regulation, operate more efficiently, stop dealing in OPM and use the savings to reduce property taxes.

County commissioners working on 2015 budget

On the expense side, the department has spent about 60 percent of its budget in the first seven months. Wright said the biggest expense is wages. Stasser said there was an overtime issue at the beginning of the year, but the department has since hired more part-time staff to mitigate that.

The department's revenue is below what had been projected. Wright said the problem is that while the department can charge what it wants for emergency runs, insurance only pays a fraction of that, and Medicaid is the worst payer.

Where the department makes most of its money is in transfers – taking patients from to a hospital outside the immediate community. Wright said the department is averaging 17 transfers a month. Expanding that could bring in a lot more money, but the department only has one transfer crew.

The commissioners also discussed with Wright and Stasser one of the ambulances, Med Five, which has suffered from repeated breakdowns. Stasser said one option is to rebuild the vehicle with a new engine. A new diesel ambulance could cost $92,000 or more. The commissioners instructed Stasser to keep looking at options for used vehicles, and in the mean time to take Med Five to the Road and Bridge Department to see if it could be fixed in-house.

• Met with Eric Albright, the county's information technology director, about equipment failures. Albright said there have been two major power outages recently that have affected the courthouse, and it has suffered several equipment failures as a result, including a printer and several power supplies.

“This is hurting us,” he said. “Things are not stable.”

The commissioners agreed to discuss electric power issues with the city at a future meeting.

• Met with Tony Thompson, Goodland Regional Medical Center chief executive officer, and hospital board member Faye Paxton about selecting a new board member.

Thompson said from the administrator's perspective, a good board member works well with the other members, but is able to express themselves well. Good business sense is also important, he said. Paxton said a good board member should be interested in growing the hospital.

“It should be someone who is not there for their own reasons,” she said.

The commission has received several applications. The commissioners looked through the applications and said they would present a recommendation to the hospital board and get their input before appointing someone.

• Discussed charges that Klemm had received from the Sherman Rural Fire Department for putting out a fire on his property last year. Klemm said he had looked at the statute, which seemed ambiguous on what fires the department should charge for. He recused himself, saying he wanted to bring the issue up, but would abide by what the other commissioners decided.

Enfield asked Rumpel, who takes minutes for the fire board, what had been decided there. Rumpel said the board had looked at the situation and decided the charges were appropriate. They had also sent the case to Moser, who had agreed. Rumpel said the fire board felt everyone needed to be treated equally in these situations.

Both Enfield and Evert said they would not want to undercut another board's decision and said the charges should stand. They agreed that the statute could be examined to see if better definitions could be added.

Preservationist works to save old barns

By Ron Wilson
*Director
Huck Boyd National Institute for Rural Development at Kansas State University*
Can a barn be reborn? Today we'll meet a man who believes strongly that barns are a vital element of our history and that they should be utilized and preserved. His personal journey in barn preservation has led him to rural Kansas.
Roger Hubert is a barn preservationist. He grew up in Johnson County. His grandparents farmed near Topeka.

One of his uncles had a large limestone barn and house on a farm near Alma where Roger spent his summers. "I was mesmerized by it," Roger said. He was fascinated by the shape, scale and history of the old stone barn which had been constructed by a Civil War veteran. Roger was especially interested in history. "My granddad would be diggin' post holes for fence when I was a kid," he said. "But I wasn't much help 'cause I was looking for arrowheads in the dirt."

Roger attended the University of Kansas where he studied architecture, art history, and archaeology. He went on archaeological digs in Italy, Greece, Egypt and Central America. He always was interested in saving and restoring old buildings. While in New Mexico, he found he could make an income from saving and selling old, historic structures.
One day, in an antique store in Lincoln County, New Mexico, he saw a nice painting of a small farmstead silhouetted in a sunset. He bought the painting for five dollars, took it home, hung it up, and said, "There's my dream house."

Meanwhile, a large, rundown ranch named Los Luceros was up for sale in New Mexico. Roger outbid a developer and found a way to buy the ranch and restore its historic buildings. That ranch is now part of the state's museum and park system. "I'm glad I was able to save Los Luceros," he said.
His ultimate goal was to find and restore a genuine stone farmstead in an undeveloped area of the Kansas prairie. He made lots of trips back to Kansas and eventually moved back, but couldn't find just the right place to restore. "I had lots of goose chases," he said. "There were stone houses without barns and barns without houses. Some were too far gone, and some were too close to a highway for me."

One day, Roger stopped in at an antique store in the rural community of Wilson, population 791 people. Now, that's rural. As he had done at countless locations before, Roger asked the store owner if he knew of any limestone farmsteads for sale in the area. Directions were given to one possible place so Roger drove out to see. Unfortunately, there had been a house fire and the barn had fallen down. It was yet another dead end.
Roger ventured on down the dirt road a ways and then something caught his eye. It was a small stone house, barn, and pond with cattle grazing around it. No other development was in sight. To Roger, it looked just right. "The farm found me," he said.

But there were a couple of problems: First, the buildings were very run down, and second, the place was not for sale.
"There were six brothers and sisters who had inherited the place, plus their spouses, and they hadn't thought on selling anything," Roger said.
It was time consuming but Roger persisted. Eventually he bought the farmstead. One day he was taking pictures there as the sun was setting. When he saw the photos and shadowed house, he realized that they literally matched the scene in the five dollar painting he had purchased years before which depicted his "dream home." Roger is restoring the home and barn while living there.

"That painting was my road map from Lincoln County, New Mexico to Lincoln County, Kansas," Roger mused, as it gave him his own stone barn to rescue.
Can a barn be reborn? Yes, and saving the barn can save the homestead, Roger believes. We commend Roger Hubert for making a difference with his passion for preserving old barns.
And there's more. His heart for saving barns has extended into a statewide organization. We'll learn about that next week.

Like puzzles? Then you'll love sudoku. This mind-bending puzzle will have you hooked from the moment you square off, so sharpen your pencil and put your sudoku savvy to the test!

Here's How It Works:

Sudoku puzzles are formatted as a 9x9 grid, broken down into nine 3x3 boxes. To solve a sudoku, the numbers 1 through 9 must fill each row, column and box. Each number can appear only once in each row, column and box. You can figure out the order in which the numbers will appear by using the numeric clues already provided in the boxes. The more numbers you name, the easier it gets to solve the puzzle!
