Students have fun at prom

(Continued from Page 1) Complete Music, Manhattan. One of the adult sponsors said, "I think the kids had a good time. They were all very well behaved and it was fun to watch them."

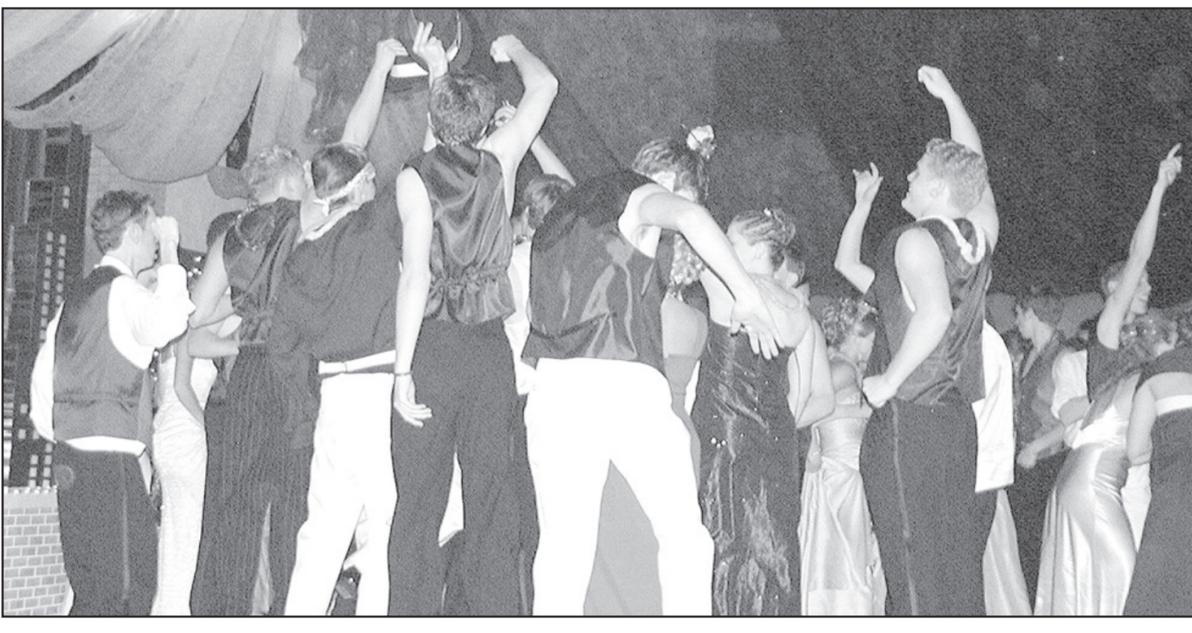

At 11 p.m., the lights came up and members of the junior class, holding the crowns and flowers for the royalty, milled among the dancers. They were following a long-standing Norton tradition of prolonging the announcement of Prom King and Queen, Prince and Princess. Finally, though, the prince's crown was placed on the head of Lance Roe and the princess' bouquet was given to Chelle Donovan. Shortly after, Luke Pfannenstiel was crowned Prom King and Naomi Streck was crowned Prom Queen.

After the dance at the school, it was on to Post Prom at the Armory. The theme was "Pirates of the Caribbean". The post-prom committee, chaired by Julie Neff, entertained the juniors and seniors until 4:30 a.m. with more dancing, games, food and prizes.

Rachael Lentz (above) twirled for the camera in her sea-foam green gown. These dancers (below) were in the swing during the dance on Prom night.

Development board gets rid of director

(Continued from Page 1) worked with her personally, but had spoken to several people who she had helped. No one else chose to make a comment and so the board moved to terminate the employment of Ms. Henderson, effective April 7 at midnight. The vote passed unanimously. Mrs. Hanes wanted to know why the board chose to do this. Attorney Karen Griffiths said the board's position was no position, as was stipulated by the contract. Ms. Wilson wanted to know if the board intended to look for another director or just let it go. Vice Chairman Curtis Eveleigh said that would be discussed at the next meeting, which will be tonight at 5:30 p.m. in the economic development office. The board told Ms. Henderson that she would receive written notice of her termination and asked her to turn in her keys, report any mileage she might have, and also turn in all office equipment, computer passwords and credit cards. The board asked that it be done that night.
