Mocha frosting tops coffee flavored cake

Recently there passed through my hands a wonderful old cookbook published by the Rumford Baking Powder Company. Dated 1908 and printed in London, this little gem is tattered and worn, chocolate fingerprints and dots of who-knows-what adorning its yellowed pages. On the occasional blank page are handwritten recipes in old-fashioned, faded script. It cost $1, which I'm sure was an exorbitant price in 1908. I offered the owner $2 for it but he declined so I guess we both knew it was priceless.

Today's coffee-crazed generation may think they discovered the joys of coffee only when Starbucks came into being, but the following recipe shows that the flavor has been popular in many ways for many years. Being now without an oven (or even a real kitchen, for that matter) this has not passed my personal test as Cook's Corner recipes usually have, but the spots on the worn page attest to many tests over many years. Give it a try for your next special occasion.

Tiny though this "receipt" book is with very small print, it is stuffed with wonderful old foods like Scalloped Salsify, Fig Filling, English Plum Pudding, many recipes for sauces and croquettes made from ingredients no longer available today. Lots of concotions feature raisins, dates, figs and prunes for sweetening as well as honey and molasses. Apparently sugar was a rare commodity. King George's Pudding, which calls for a pound of chopped suet, is so rich my cholesterol rose just reading!

A recommendation to cook a vegetables tender crisp, including lots of greens (dandelion, beet, collard, sorrel) resembles the way we cook now. Particularly advised is saving all "pot liquor" for use in soups and the first recipe in the book tells how to set up and cook a proper stock pot for soup. I wonder what the meat cutters would say today if you went to a modern supermarket and asked for five pounds of "mixed, cracked bones with good marrow"? Bet they made great broth.

Cooking may be a lot easier now with all our convenience foods and slick appliances but perhaps we have lost some of the flavor along with the labor. Take a day sometime and devote it to making something the old-fashioned way. Your family will love it and although you may be tired, you'll feel a real sense of accomplishment.

OFFEE LAYER CAKE with MOCHA ICING

Half a cup real butter	Half a cup strong black coffee
One cup dark brown sugar	Two cups cake flour
Two large eggs	Teaspoon allspice
Half a cup molasses	Half teaspoon salt
Two teaspoons baking powder

Beat butter and sugar smooth, add eggs, molasses and cold coffee. Triple sift flour, spice, salt and baking powder and beat into mixture. Bake in two greased, floured 9 inch layer pans at 350 degrees for twenty minutes. Turn out on racks, allow to cool completely and dust away all crumbs. Fill and frost with the following icing.

Six Tbs. real butter	Three Tbs cold strong coffee
Two c. sifted confectioner's sugar
Four Tbs. dry Dutch cocoa	One tsp. real vanilla extract

Beat butter smooth and gradually sift in one cup sugar and sifted cocoa. Beat smooth, add coffee, rest of sugar and the vanilla. Beat until silky, then fill and frost the coffee layer cake.

For a little extra spiff boil two or three Valencia oranges in a syrup made of one cup sugar and one cup orange liquor until syrup is gone. Cool overnight and slice very, very thinly with a sharp knife. Use these slices with a sprig of mint as garnish when cake is served.
