 Sirens scream in the distance as the ambulance dashes to a stop between the two battered vehicles. A drunk driver has taken the life of two young passengers. It's a scene all too familiar to police, fire and emergency personnel, but in this case, it is not real. This is a simulation of a drunk driving accident scene. But it wasn't created by some Hollywood film company or an agency in Washington. It was initiated by two high school seniors in rural Kansas.

Andrew Miller and Bret Mang are spring 2008 graduates of Greeley County High School in Tribune. They are the creators of this remarkable project.

Andrew and Bret are both interested in health care careers. They were in a school-sponsored work study program at Greeley County Health Services and went through training as emergency medical technicians or EMTs. A speaker from the Finney County EMS was giving a talk at their school. It inspired these two young men to come up with the idea of a video simulation of a drunk driving crash.

They ran the concept by their school principal, Mr. Bockwinkel, who vetoed it for being too graphic. But after they refined the idea into a more specific plan, he encouraged them to go forward. After months of work and high cooperation from many local entities, the plan went into action.

Bret says, "We've had tremendous support here." The police department donated two impounded vehicles which were battered to simulate the accident. A field at the high school was painted with lines and used as the accident scene. The school donated five video cameras to do the filming. Andrew and Bret used the school's computers and video editing software to produce the final product.

On Oct. 24, 2007, the filming took place. The entire student body was brought to the bleachers at the football stadium where vehicles blocked the mock accident scene from view. A narrator said, "Close your eyes and imagine it is a typical school day. You are at the convenience store getting a snack when you hear a large crash outside."

As the narrator spoke, the vehicles which blocked the view were moved. Then the narrator told the students to open their eyes, and what they saw was two battered vehicles and five bloody crash victims.

Andrew and Bret had arranged all this with the emergency response units in advance, and it worked like clockwork. A call was made to the sheriff's department which paged all the firefighters and EMTs hurried to the scene and tended to the victims.

The audio and video were captured electronically and packaged into a compelling fifteen minute video production on DVD.

This show is not for the squeamish. Student volunteers used moulage to simulate the blood.

And what was the students' reaction? Bret says, "Have you ever tried to keep a bunch of teenagers quiet for 45 minutes? We had them in complete silence." Andrew says, "We never thought it would turn out as well as it did."

What about the cost of this high quality production? Bret says, "We didn't spend a dime. Everything we used was loaned or donated."

That's a sign of total community support, which one can find in a rural community like Tribune, population 814. Now, that's rural.

This production is so outstanding that it has been presented to the Kansas Board of EMS and the Governor's Advisory Council on Trauma.

Andrew and Bret are headed to college, but they would like to find funds to contract with a professional company for commercial production and distribution.

Andrew says, "When people tell you how this video touched them emotionally, it's powerful."

The ambulance drives to the hospital as technicians clean up the crash scene.

It's the aftermath of a drunk driving accident, but this mock accident has been captured on film and is serving as a compelling reminder not to drink and drive.

Council: plan gathers support

 • At 6:50, open session resumed.
 • Councilwoman Elaine Mann, on behalf of Diane Becker, Economic Development Director (who was out of town to a meeting), asked the city council's support to restore the Regional Strategic Plan, and moved to adopt resolution 6-2008, in which each county must apply to renew the Kansas Enterprise Zone designation. The motion passed, pending the city attorney's review of the documents.
 • The utility committee's meeting was set for Aug. 25 at 5:30.

 • Councilman Briery made a motion to amend ordinance 1570. He asked that ATVs be able to be driven during night time hours. The amendment was approved 4-2, with councilman Toby Kuhn and councilwoman Donna Foley opposing it.
 • Councilman Briery said that Craig Krizek requested funds from the Hansen money for digital sound at the Norton Theatre. The council approved $9,200 for upgrading one theater only. Mayor Corns complimented the council on their good decisions for using the Hansen money. The council members were excited about the upgrade to the theater.
 • Mr. Briery said the downtown park and the old filling station were coming along nicely, and he'd noticed the Sander Bed and Bath sign had been finished, and that soon the new sewing shop would be opening downtown; he noted that these were all good things for Norton.
 • Mayor Corns noted that the fair this year was very nice (but hot), and he was pleased with the outcome. Councilman Briery made a motion for all city councilmen to help man fair rides or booths next year. The motion passed.
 • Councilwoman Mann moved to pay the bills, and the motion was passed.

There being no other business the meeting was adjourned at 7:20 p.m.
