Battle of the birds

In the spirit of Homecoming week, Norton Community High School students spent Wednesday morning hanging posters around downtown Norton. Art classes at the school have been creating the posters ahead of Friday evening's Homecoming football game against Colby. Pictured, student Jacob Brooks struggles to balance on a ledge to attach a poster to a downtown building while fellow students Andrew Ellis, John Risewick and Christopher Fisher help keep him from falling.

Workshops are now available

Two workshops focusing on leadership skills, communication and coaching are offered by the Management Development Center at Fort Hays State University to help develop and improve professional organizations and their members.

The workshops are based on sound management theory and delivered in a practical, applied method. Participants must register online.

"For Women Only: Leadership and Management Skills" is from 1 to 4:30 p.m. Tuesday, Oct. 23, in the school's Memorial Union. Cost of the workshop is $99.

During this session, participants will examine leadership and management skills and help develop competencies needed to meet the challenges women face in the workplace, establish distinction between leading and managing, identify skills needed to be effective as both a leader and manager, and develop individual and group actions needed to achieve performance goals.

This workshop is for women currently leading, managing or supervising women who aspire to increase their leadership and management skills to be more effective in their current positions.

"Communication and Coaching Skills in the Workplace" is from 1 to 4:30 p.m. Tuesday, Nov. 13, in the Memorial Union.

The cost is $99.

The knowledge gained from this workshop will help participants understand what drives their behavior and the behavior of others when engaged in communication and coaching.

It will include two assessments, "What's My Communication Style" and "What's My Coaching Style," followed by activities allowing participants to apply and experiment with communication and coaching simulations.

Men or women interested in developing their leader, manager and follower skills to be more effective in their current positions are welcome.

Participants will understand how communication impacts relationships, learn about the different types of communication, understand the four communication styles, discover a quick way to identify styles of others and learn how to use style to improve communication.

To register for workshops, visit www.fhsu.edu/cob/mdc/Workshop-Series.
