Proposal to change food labels

It's increasingly commonplace, grocery shoppers browsing the aisles and checking food labels for all kinds of information; fat, calories, carbs and more. Proposed changes to those labels will give shoppers even better, clearer information.

Earlier this year, the Food and Drug Administration proposed the first significant changes in 20 years to the nutrition facts label found on food packages.

We shouldn't have to have reading glasses to be able to see the number of calories in food we're considering buying in the grocery store. The familiar design of the label is proposed to stay as is, but certain parts could be revised to help us better use the information.

Some of the proposed changes include:

- Updating serving size requirements and new labeling requirements for certain size packages.

- Requiring declaration of "Added Sugars" under "Sugars."

- Removing "Calories from fat."

- Revising the nutrients of public health significance. Currently, calcium and iron are required; vitamin D and potassium also would be required.

- Revising Daily Values for certain nutrients that are mandatory or voluntary. This includes calcium, sodium, dietary fiber and vitamin D.

These pieces of information should help consumers make better, more informed purchases. However, consumers will still have to be savvy about purchases and will need to pay special attention to serving sizes and how many servings are in the containers.

HANSEN MUSEUM

The Dane G. Hansen Museum is proud to present "Earth and Loom: A Century of Native American Art" which opened May 16 and will run through July 13. This exhibit will consist of 20 Navajo weavings dating from the late 19th century to contemporary. They represent different regions and weaving styles over the past century. Also in the exhibit, will be 26 pieces of pueblo pottery representing the work of many significant Native American potters from nine different pueblos. This pottery also dates from the late 19th century to contemporary.

This exhibition is the private collection of Dennis and Carola Deschner of Phillipsburg.

They started collecting nearly 30 years ago by accident when they bought a Navajo weaving in Colorado. They continued to find pieces as they travelled and fell in love with Southwestern Art, basketry, and Pueblo pottery.

Our June artist of the month is Paula Rumbach from Oakley. She has quilts, signs, and tote bags on display throughout the month of June.

We still have room for crafters in our 41st Annual Hansen Arts and Craft Fair. For more information, call Nova at the museum office.

We are looking forward to the David Vollbracht Oil Painting Workshop on July 9, 10, 11 and 12. David resides in Medicine Lodge, and has earned a degree in art from Fort Hays State University. He is a representational landscape painter of the west. His work reflects the quality of light, nature and spirit drawn from the land. For many years, he has made trips to various parts of the west to gather reference material for realistic impressions created primarily in oil. David emphasizes the beauty and importance of the natural landscape in his compositions. He is intrigued by the patterns and shapes in nature and concentrates on the effects of light on these elements. For more information call 785.689.4846 or www.hansenmuseum.org

Water Vision draft to be posted

The first draft of the Kansas Water Vision will be posted to the Kansas Water Office website on July 1 so citizens are able to provide input to the Governor's Water Vision Team on the statewide tour that will be held July 7-11.

"The Team began gathering input in December from stakeholders of all water uses to develop this first draft," said Susan Metzger, Vision Team Leader -Kansas Water Office. "There were some resounding messages throughout the last few months: a strong, long-term water Vision for Kansas must be statewide while recognizing that one size does not fit all; a reliable water supply is bigger than quantity and the quality of our water resources is equally important; and public information and education is critical to the successful adoption of the Vision."

As seen the past few years with extremes of extended drought to cases of flooding, the entire state and its citizens are affected by what happens with water supplies and its management. Last fall Governor Sam Brownback called for a 50 Year Vision to ensure a reliable water supply for Kansas citizens.

"We are looking forward to hearing from Kansans," said Secretary Jackie McClaskey. "The entire state is affected by what happens with our water, no matter what area of Kansas you live in. Water determines everything from community and industry survival and growth to making us marketable for other opportunities."

Stakeholders and Kansas citizens are encouraged to attend one of the Vision Tour input sessions. For more information about the Governor's Call to Action for a 50-Year Vision and a list of times and addresses for each tour location, visit www.kwo.org.
