Moran says he looks after rural Kansas

By KIMBERLY DAVIS

With 10 years of service in the United States Congress under his belt, Jerry Moran is seeking re-election in the 1st District of Kansas.

A Republican, Mr. Moran served eight years in the state Senate before being elected to Congress, including election as majority leader in the Senate. Rep. Moran said he had nine counties then, and he now represents 69.

Rep. Moran said his interest in Congress is to help improve the chances for rural America and make sure this part of the world has a future. He said people in rural Kansas need to be able to put food on the table every night, to save money for their kids to get an education and to save for retirement.

The question, he said, is what he can do in Washington to help keep towns like Oberlin, Norcatur and Jennings around for the next generation. The idea, he said, is to keep communities in Kansas viable so people can continue to live here.

Rep. Moran said his wife Robba and their two teenage daughters live in Hays. He said he likes living in Kansas and he wanted to raise his kids here. By living in Kansas, said Rep. Moran, he is able to stay in touch with the people.

There are only about six or seven weekends in a year that he isn't at home because Congress is in session or he is in a committee meeting, he said. During the times when he is at home, said Rep. Moran, there isn't one visit that doesn't include him finding a farm, business, school, hospital or someone to visit.

On Monday, he was on his way to Herington to visit the hospital and he planned to be in Sheridan County on Tuesday for the funeral of Sheriff Jim Johnson.

Washington, said Rep. Moran, can change people in a way that they don't want to be changed, and he tries to avoid that and stay close to his district.

Rep. Moran serves on the House Agriculture Committee, where he chairs the subcommittee on farm programs, and on the Transportation and Veterans Affairs committees.

He said he also serves on the Rural Health Care Coalition, which works on health care issues affecting rural America.

Health care, he said, is important for maintaining the quality of life for people and saving their lives. If a town loses its health care, that can cause the town to shrink.

It is important for young families, the elderly and everyone in between to have access to a doctor and hospital where they can get care in their home town, he said. Health care is very much a federal issue, he added, because without federal programs like Medicare and Medicaid paying for services, it will be harder to keep health care in rural areas.

Rep. Moran said he voted against the No Child Left Behind Act because the bill, the centerpiece of President Bush's education policy, has "a number of problems." In smaller towns, he said, it is hard to attract and retain teachers certified in every area that a district needs them to teach.

Education, said Rep. Moran, should remain more of a state and local issue. Education should be about a child who wants to learn, a parent who wants to help their child learn and teachers who want to teach, not federal regulations.

He said people need to be able to renew their driver's licenses in their county treasurer's office. Rep. Moran said he is against the idea of taking that service out of home-towns and is talking with the Department of Homeland Security about keeping that service local.

The problem he faces, Rep. Moran said, and so do the people in his district, is the belief in Washington that lawmakers can pass one rule or one bill and it is OK for everyone. Kansas is unique, he said. His district is one of the largest in the nation with the fewest people per square mile.

"I am always trying to represent rural America, the people and where they stand," said Rep. Moran. "We see the one-size-fits-all government and it just doesn't work for people in rural areas like my district."

Ex-coach wants more than 'nice guy'

By TOMBETZ

The Goodland Star-News

Campaigning around the "Big First" Congressional District has been a rewarding experience for the retired coach from Garden City who is trying to unseat an incumbent congressman.

Democrat John Doll, a former coach and agribusinessman, is running against Republican Rep. Jerry Moran of Hays.

Mr. Doll agreed it is an uphill battle, but said the district voted for Gov. Kathleen Sebelius in 2002, and he thinks that means the voters are not as Republican as the registration figures might indicate.

"Jerry is a nice guy," Mr. Doll said, "but he hasn't had a vote that has helped the middle class for the past 10 years. He voted to cut education, Medicare and agriculture, and I felt that was enough. I felt I had to stand up."

Mr. Doll said he grew up in Ingalls, between Dodge City and Garden City, and learned about agriculture working in his family's feed yards and grain elevators. Later, he was a crop chemical applicator and crop insurance adjuster. Today, he operates a chemical application business.

"I have had a blast campaigning and getting to meet and talk to people," Mr. Doll said Sunday. "I was in Pratt, Junction City and then Great Bend on Saturday."

"I am happy I did this. I feel it is a good cause, and my only regret is that with all the research I have done, it might have been better if someone with more experience had run."

"I don't feel like we are being represented. That is the hardest I can be on Jerry. That is not our nature out here."

Mr. Doll graduated from St. Mary of the Plains College in Dodge City and attended graduate school at Emporia State University. For 20 years, he taught history and government in Kansas schools. He said he loves sports and young people and was a coach in Scott City.

Mr. Doll said in his poll figures show he is not doing badly in the race, and he hopes to take advantage of the people who are fed up with Congress and the incumbents.

Talking about the size of the Big First as an example, Mr. Doll said the two parties have drawn the boundaries to give incumbents the edge in a majority of the races across the country.

"I taught government, and talked about gerrymandering," Mr. Doll said. "I never knew that it would really affect my life."

Mr. Doll thinks the people may surprise some incumbents this election, because the voters want representatives in Congress who look out for their real values.

"Many Kansans accurately sense that our government has been bought and paid for by powerful interests with deep pockets," he said. "They sense that our government's priorities are being dictated by something other than the public interest. I will work without compromise to restore accountability, honesty and openness at all levels of government."

Mr. Doll said he thinks the country needs to turn more to wind energy, which he said would help make the country depend less on foreign oil.

"Rising gas prices are squeezing middle class Kansans," he said. "It's just the tip of the iceberg when it comes to the challenges facing our country's energy policy."

Mr. Doll said the cuts in Medicare and plans to privatize Social Security are part of the reason he is running for office.

"Social Security faces a fixable financing problem," Mr. Doll said, "but the president's privatization plan actually makes that problem worse."

Mr. Doll lives in Garden City with his wife of 24 years, Janet, and their children, Hayley, 20, and Ethan, 16.

"I have met a lot of people in the campaign," he said. "None of the Moran people have been at the candidate forums, and I always end up with the discussion between me and Susan Waggle, who is running for lieutenant governor with Jim Barnett."
