

Woman guesses football winners for eight games

This week, only one person got all eight game winners right in The Oberlin Herald's Pigskin Pickem contest.

While the contestants had some trouble figuring out who would win the games, most of them did better than the sports reporter, who put in that Missouri was playing both Colorado and Nebraska.

Missouri is probably glad it didn't have to play two games, since Nebraska downed the Tigers 31-17. Colorado played Oklahoma and lost 43-10.

Because of the error, the scorer took either Oklahoma or Missouri as the right answer to that game. However, most contestants were smarter than us and put down Oklahoma.

Cheri Kastens of Herndon was the one person who came up with all winners. She wins $15 in scrip money.

Three people came up with seven right and we used the tie breaker to determine the winners.

Zach May of Oberlin was the closest on the tie breaker game, in which Northwest Missouri beat Fort Hays State 45-27. He wins the $10 second prize.

Ivis Hanson of Oberlin came in next and wins the $5 third prize.

Shirley Simpson also had seven out of eight right.

Putting down six out of eight were Jim Hollowell, Kelly Brown, Kel Grafel and Rusty Addleman, Oberlin; Charissa Huff, Lebanon, Neb.; and Amanda Adams, Danbury, Neb.

Ryan Leitner, Oberlin, picked five out of eight.

Coming in with four correct were Linda Hollowell, Travis Raile, Charley Keller, Owen Wilson and Tim Martin, Oberlin, and Wilbur Reichert, Dresden.

All eligible scores will be recorded. At the end of the 12-week contest, the contestant picking the most correct games will receive $50 in scrip and a trophy.

The money won in the contest can be spent only at the sponsors: Ward Drug Store, the LandMark Inn, Fredrickson Insurance Agency, Decatur Co-op and Ampride, Creative Collision, Farm Bureau Financial Services and The Oberlin Herald.

Other scores of this week's games were:

- Iowa State over KU, 28-16.
- Oklahoma State over K-State, 24-14.
- Baylor over Texas, 30-22.
- Texas A&M over Texas Tech, 45-27.
- Missouri Western over Emporia State, 42-14.
- Rawlins County (Atwood) over St. Francis, 24-14.

Parade planned for vets

The Oberlin American Legion Post plans a Veterans Day parade next Thursday, Nov. 11.

The parade will assemble on Griffith Avenue northeast of the Good Samaritan Center at 10:30 a.m. Participants will step off shortly before 11 a.m. and pass in front of the center before turning left on Penn Avenue and marching downtown.

A short program will be conducted at the gazebo in Centennial Park during which Dave Bergling will be recognized as Grand Marshal, the National Anthem will be sung and the Oberlin American Legion firing squad will fire the 21-gun salute, followed by "Taps."

The parade will then reform and proceed through downtown to Hall Street, where it will disperse.

Veterans, family, American Legion Auxiliary and Sons of the American Legion members and supporters from throughout the area are invited to join. Veterans are encouraged to wear uniform items. The Legion will provide transportation for those unable to walk the route.

While Veterans Day honors all American veterans, the date marks the anniversary of the armistice which ended World War I "at the 11th hour of the 11th day of the 11th month" in 1918.

Parade of Lights still needs entries

Entries are needed for the annual Parade of Lights on Main Street to help kick off the Christmas season.

The parade, sponsored by the Oberlin Business Alliance, is scheduled for dark on Friday, Nov. 26, the day after Thanksgiving.

The theme this year, Candy Land Christmas, was suggested by Belinda Jones' fifth grade class at Oberlin Elementary School.

Anyone who wants to enter a float should call 475-3441.

Council discusses international code

The Oberlin City Council discussed adding some of the International Construction Code to the city's building codes, which could change how homeowners and contractors do projects.

Building inspection, Mayor Joe Stanley said at a meeting Thursday, Oct. 21, is something the city hasn't done well in the past 30, 40 to 50 years. The city's never had a true building inspector, he said.

Paul Hawkins of Norcat, who says he's a certified building inspector for the international code, talked with the council about becoming a member or adopting some or all of the code.

To join the organization would cost about $100, said Mr. Hawkins. The city doesn't have to join, though, he said; the council can just adopt the codes into city ordinances.

Basically, said Mr. Hawkins, adopting the code would change things so that skilled, qualified workers would need to do the jobs. The city can adopt some or all of it.

The codes are set rules on how things need to be done for safety reasons, he said.

How far down in construction do the codes go? asked Mayor Stanley. If a person wanted to replace a light switch in their own home, would that need to be inspected? Mr. Hawkins said no.

How about if someone wants to replace a sprinkler head on a closed system in their yard, the mayor asked. The homeowner doesn't need a permit, said Mr. Hawkins, but they should have someone come look at the work.

This just sounds like another way for government to tell people what has to be done in their own homes and on their property, said Councilman Rob McFee.

This would be a major change in the way things are done, Mayor Stanley agreed.

Mr. McFee asked how thick the code is. It sounds like so much that it can't be applicable to everyone all the time, he said.

There is a lot, agreed Mr. Hawkins, but it means that contractors who aren't trained to do the work right won't be working.

Mr. McFee read through a list of cities in Kansas that have adopted this code. Most are bigger and in eastern Kansas. He said he's been to most of those cities and doesn't want Oberlin to be anything like them. Mr. McFee said he isn't in favor of adopting any or all of the code.

The city currently uses the national building code from the late 1980s to the early 1990s, said Ms. May.

Mayor Stanley said City Attorney Steve Hirsch had looked at the codes and pointed out some areas that the city might not want to adopt.

Mr. McFee said he doesn't want to adopt any part if the code is going to tell him he has to put ground fault circuit interrupter outlets in his kitchen.

Mr. Hawkins said there are some provisions for older homes.

Mayor Stanley said the council wasn't going to decide on whether or not to adopt part or all of the code that night, but it is something to look at.
